Cedar street.—Sidewalk to be built on south side from Park street as far west as there are houses on the street.

McDonnell street—New sidewalk from the Grand Trunk Railway as far as Mr. Derry's residence, also that the clerk request the railway authorities to make good the crossing as required by law.

Downie street—The drain on north end to be continued as far as Edinburgh street, and sidewalk from thence to Smith street to be repaired.

Charlotte street—We recommend that one hundred dollars be granted for this street, provided that the parties interested subscribe the sum of $150 in money or labor, the whole amount to be expended according to the directions of the street inspector.

The continuation of King street to be dealt with in the same manner, when the parties interested in the grading at said street, subscribe accordingly.

Sherbrooke street.—Sidewalk on south side to be connected between Stewart and Rubidge streets, also between Bethune and Stewart street, in front of Mr. McNaughton's shop.

King street.—The inspector to examine the drain on this street, and remove any obstructions to the flow of the water in the drain.

Brock street.—Sidewalk on south end to be repaired.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) T. Cahill,
Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Kelly the recommendation to build a sidewalk on the south side of Brock street leading to St. John's Church was added to the report.

On motion of Mr. Cahill the report was adopted.

BY-LAWS.

The by-law for the exemption from taxation of the Powell and Jones stove works for a period of ten years, was then read and passed.

A by-law granting $300 to the West Riding Agricultural Society was read a third time and passed.

The Clerk was authorized to draft a by-law of the same nature respecting the Lock Works.

Moved by Mr. Yelland, seconded by Mr. McNaughton, that the Street Inspector is hereby instructed to repair culvert on Bethune street, between Murray and McDonnel streets.—Carried.

On motion of Mr. Kelly, the Council adjourned until next Thursday evening.

The "Forester's" Excursion.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER :

DEAR SIR,—I observe a letter in your daily contemporary of last evening, signed by "A. McNeil, Secretary Committee," reflecting on the good faith of the C. P. R., and going out of its way to gut a spiteful dig below the belt of Mr. Maynard. There is no more courteous or obliging railroad man than Mr. Maynard, and there is no one more popular with the public ; and, whilst he sincerely regretted that, owing to the falling in of the Kaladar sink hole, which disorganized their train system, and also owing to the number of cars required for the transportation of the troops, the C. P. R. could not keep to the exact letter of their agreement, he did everything in his power to make us comfortable, and, in order to give the excursionists a little more time in the city, had the train delayed four hours.

On the train down it was intimated to me with a quiet smile, that this excursion was an excursion solely of Mr. McNeil as a personage, not as an individual, and the Foresters were being utilized as a green background upon which the simple personality of the illustrious ex-councillor pro tem. might be vividly poartrayed to the gaping eyes of the thousands, and I have therefore excellent reasons for imagining that when Mr. Maynard was discourteous, which is extremely doubtful, he was only resenting a little insolent puppyism of the "excursion" as an individual. I was one of those who took the opportunity to go to Ottawa on the excursion, and while not appreciating the length of time I was on the train, still was pleased with my journey, but I certainly disapprove of the petty spirit of Mr. McNeil singling out one man for special attack. If Mr. McNeil has a guarantee from the C. P. R., they are a responsible Company and he can get his damages ; but I have reason to doubt his assertion of a guarantee from the Company.

It is generally known that Mr. McNiel makes special effort to thrust himself forward as the head and front of such undertakings, and the complaints made against Mr. Maynard may have arisen from a little quiet sitting on a too bumptious aspirant for petty honours.

Yours truly,
"EXCURSIONIST."

A Noble Gift.

Wm. Mulock, M. P., (a Reformer) set a noble example in donating the $500 received for extra parliamentary services to the York volunteers. Had every other member of parliament and senate done the same there would have been something like $150,000 to distribute, which would have meant, taking the number of 5000, $30 for each volunteer —not a bad sum in a lump for men who have to work for their living.—Toronto World.

A Word For the Band.

The Ottawa Free Press thus kindly compliments the Fire Brigade Band that visited Ottawa with the Forester's excursion :—"The splendid band of the 57th Battalion and Peterborough Fire Brigade, under the efficient leadership of Bandmaster Miller, gave several selections at various central points of the city. About half past five last evening they played "The Sacred Lyre," and fantasie "La Pariselle," in the City Hall Square, attracting much notice by the excellency of their expression, especially in the former piece. They afterwards played the "Gloria in excelcis Deo" from Mozart's twelfth Mass, in front of the Grand Union Hotel, where they stayed ; in the evening giving a first-class selection on the Parliament Hill, thereby affording the citizens the rare treat of a musical promenade. Before leaving this morning they also serenaded the Free Press office.

Toronto's Returning Troops.

The Queen City's Magnificent Reception.

Toronto's reception yesterday to her brave volunteers returning from the North-West, was an event unparalleled in the history of the Dominion. From North Toronto to the City Hall the route of the procession was densely thronged with enthusiastic spectators, whose cheers as the troops passed made a deafening roar, which drowned the music of the bands, while the abundance and splendour of the decorations in the streets and on the houses—together with windows thronged with members of the fair sex—combined to produce a scene not easily to be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

Defeat of the Government.

A Majority of Fifty Votes Against the Tories.

LONDON, July 24.—The government was defeated in the House of Commons this evening by a vote of 180 to 130 on a clause of the medical relief bill. The Parnellites opposed the Government. On the announcement of the result the ministers held a hurried consultation, and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach announced that the Government relinquished responsibility for the bill. Sir Wm. Harcourt immediately accepted the responsibility on behalf of the opposition. The discussion was then continued. Mr. Labouchere started an exciting debate in which the Liberals tried to induce the government to state whether it intended to oppose the bill eventually. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach promised to make a statement to-morrow.

"What are the chief elements of prosperity?" asked the professor. "Money," promptly replied the smart bad boy at the foot of the class. "Money. No truly prosperous man is very poor. If he has——" But the professor sat down on him as usual and marked him "4 off," although the boy, according to his custom, had made a fine shot.

What It Is to Get Hungry.

Very few persons in this land of plenty know what real hunger is. They imagine a slight craving for something to eat, or a little gnawing sensation in the stomach, to be hunger. A soldier who spent the winter of '63-'64 on Stringer Ridge, opposite Lookout Mountain, says he was hungry for three months, not a moment of which time he was not anxious for something to eat. They had three small crackers a day, what corn they could steal from the starving mules, and a few half-ripe persimmons. One day word was brought to camp that a mule had mired in the mud on the Raccoon Mountain Road and had been killed. He and a number of others started in search of the carcass, with visions of mule steak before their eyes. On their arrival they found fully 200 men there who had come on the same errand. Of the mule there were only the hoofs left. Two members of the "Hundred and Dutch" (One Hundred and Eighth Ohio) Regiment had just finished a hotly contested fight for the tail. While they were fighting it was stolen, leaving them only their black eyes and bloody noses as the result of their battle.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Wonderful Find.

Some weeks ago, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, a lady riding in a car on the Pennsylvania railroad between this city and Harrisburg had the misfortune to lose a very valuable bracelet. While putting up the window of the car it became unclasped and fell out. The loss was reported to the conductor who took the name and address of the lady, and in four days afterwards she had the satisfaction of having the bracelet returned to her. How was it done? By a very simple process. On arriving in this city, the conductor telegraphed the loss to the various station masters near where it occurred; the station master of each station placed the facts in possession of the track walkers, and the track walkers were given orders to keep their eyes open on their rounds for the bracelet. These men go over the track every day, their business being to see that no obstructions are on the road. In this way one of these walkers discovered this piece of jewelry. It was returned to the station master with the report of the track walker; then it went to the conductor with a report, and in due time found its way to headquarters, where the various reports were placed on file, and finally returned to the owner, whose receipt therefor closed up the account.

The Triumph of Innocence.

Two children, a boy of 9 and a girl of 4 years, came into a Cleveland street car Saturday. The girl climbed upon the seat and looked out the window. Suddenly turning her face, she fixed her gaze upon the face of the boy with a look of eager longing. Throwing her arms around his neck, she laid her cheek lovingly against his, and in pleading accents whispered, "Bob, say, have you got some gum in your mouth?" Bob returned the caress, gently put her aside, and made no answer. In no wise disconcerted, the little maiden renewed the attack, appealing to his love, his generosity, his manliness, his chivalry, to her need, her helplessness, and independence, enforcing each argument with melting glances and caressing flatteries. Bob, true to his man's nature, smiled sweetly and indifferently and calmly pursued his thoughts and his task. At last a look of awful determination settled down on the little face which a moment before was wreathed in smiles. Bracing one knee against the back of the seat and the other against the defenseless Bob, she took his face between her two hands, pushed his head back against the window, struck an attitude worthy of a first-class dentist, and made a thorough and vigorous examination of that month. Suddenly a look of joy flashed across the gloom of that small countenance, as with an air of triumph her hand dashed into the mouth and returned with the coveted treasure. With an expression of perfect contentment and satisfaction it was transferred to her own mouth, and she sat down beside Bob once more the gentle and dependent sister, all smiles and tenderness.

How to Develop Courage.

When Coppinger, who lately married Mr. Blaine's daughter, was stationed at Camp Verde, Arizona, as the Captain of one of the companies of the Twenty-third Infantry, in 1872, the writer happened to be the witness of an incident that illustrates the character and disposition of the man. A band of recruits arrived one day, filled with fear and terror of the officer under whom they were to serve for the ensuing five years. Report and rumor had pictured Coppinger to them as being a pirate captain and persecutor of the rank and file. Coppinger, attired in a suit of clothes that might have distinguished a teamster, was in the sutler's store when one of the recruits entered. "I would like to see this Capt. Coppinger," said the recruit. "I understand he's a hard man." Everybody present expected Coppinger to annihilate the new comer, but he did not. On the contrary, he engaged him in a pleasant conversation, in which Capt. Coppinger was abused in a manner that caused the listeners to fear that the private would be punished for his temerity. Finally, when the vocabulary was exhausted, Coppinger introduced himself to the astonished soldier. "I hope you will think better of what you have said," remarked the Captain, as he turned to leave. "Well, see here," replied the recruit, "I suppose this means guard house and ball and chain for me, but if I have to die for it, I must insist that according to all reports, you are a d—d tyrant." Coppinger looked the fellow in the eye a minute. "I like your courage," he said, when at length he broke the silence. "Come up to my quarters with me. I have some old bourbon there that will develope it." The recruit was soon afterwards commissioned as a corporal.

REWARDING THE VOLUNTEERS.

The country rejoices that, owing to the gallant efforts of our citizen soldiers, the rebellion in the Northwest has been speedily crushed. At one time it threatened to assume much more formidable proportions, but the dash, energy, courage and recklessness of fatigue and danger shown by our gallant troops overawed the rebellious and led to their seeking terms of surrender as soon as the power of Canada was demonstrated. The services of the volunteers have been abundantly appreciated by the people. The magnificent receptions that have been everywhere accorded to the returning troops is proof of this. They are everyway worthy of all the honor that has been paid them, and besides they are worthy of more substantial reward. Their pay has not been even an indemnity. The hardships they have patiently endured, the courage and gallantry in action that has distinguished every corps, places them at the head of the soldiery of this continent, with the chances against finding their superiors in the world, and certainly entitle them to a more solid reward than mere empty triumphs. We have heretofore pointed out that the proposed rewards of merit by the Government are shamefully inadequate and it does not seem that anything better may be expected from this quarter. If the volunteers are to be substantially remembered for their services in the North-West, it is to the women of the Dominion we will have to look. It was the women of Canada that brought first of the heroes in the campaign, and it is to their thoughtfulness that the troops did not suffer in the field. The supplementary supplies came at a most opportune moment. But for the arrival of fresh meats, fruits, etc., the scourge of scurvy would probably have been added to the other hardships of the campaign. And, when it is remembered how the volunteers were instrumental in rescuing female prisoners from the clutches of their Indian captors, and from indignities and nameless horrors of treatment, whose enormity only a woman can appreciate, the ladies of Canada must feel an added thrill of gratitude to our gallant volunteers for the happy rescue of the unfortunate members of their sex who would otherwise have been at the mercy of a horde of barbarians, who know no mercy.

It would not therefore be amiss for the women of the Dominion to all take a share in contributing to a fund for the members of the different corps whose efforts directly or indirectly assisted in vindicating the respect due their sex, and rescuing them from a fate, compared to which death itself would have been a happy fortune. Would it not be well to make the subscription a popular one so that every woman and girl in the Dominion would have a share in showing their gratitude to those gallant lads who, in this case, have been literally the defenders of the persons as well as the honor and virtue of their sex. The scheme is merely suggested in its crudity with the hope that some of the thousands of noble women in Canada, with influence enough to give the movement a successful prestige, will carry the idea into practice. We are sure the press can be counted on to lend its assistance.

An Orange Sermon.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—At the request of several prominent brethren of this section, I forward you the enclosed sermon, preached by Rev. Wm. Bennett, on Sunday, July 12th, at the instance of Orangemen, with a request for its publication.

Yours, etc.,

Springville, July 22nd, 1885.

"One generation shall praise Thy works to another, and shall show thy mighty acts.—cxlv. 4.

The meaning of this passage evidently is, that it is the duty of parents to teach their children regarding the works of God. In olden times this teaching was done to a large extent through monuments and festivals and annual celebrations. The passover, for instance, was instituted and observed from year to year, so that it might be a vehicle of communication from age to age, of the emancipation of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage. This was done, in part, that the children might ask what mean ye by this service? The parents would then enter into full explanation of the and the mighty power shown in their deliverance.

Memorial days and memorial observances have been common in all ages, and I suppose in all parts of the world. They are common still. To-day is a memorial day—a day commemorative of a great event in the history of the Protestant church. It is a day commemorative of a great victory over popish tyranny and oppression, and therefore of a great deliverance from worse than Egyptian bondage. The victory at the Boyne was the crowning triumph of the Prince of Orange over the forces of the popish king. This would only have been a small thing in itself. Battles are not usually fought just for the sake of victory on the one side or the other, but that are at stake. The principles involved in this struggle of which we are reminded to-day, are Protestant liberty as opposed to popish oppression. The battle of the Boyne terminated the struggle, but it was not the beginning of it. For many months previously the conflict had been going on between the followers of William and James, but this was the termination of it. The closing of the gates of Derry was the first act of defiance to James and his popish minions. James, you know, on his coming to the English throne, just 200 years ago, immediately began the work of the destruction of Protestantism, which had been established under the former reigns. The people became alarmed, they saw something must be done to save themselves from the iron yoke of Rome. The Prince of Orange was the son-in-law of James. He and his wife were both thorough Protestants. William was invited to come to England and assume the reins of Government. He accepted of the invitation and landed in England on the 5th November, 1688. The people rose in masses to join him so that he was able to make his way to London without a single battle. In about a month James left the country. A convocation was held of Lords and Commons at London, at which it was decided that James had abdicated the throne and that William and Mary were now to be of England. William and Mary were accepted of by England and Scotland, but not so with Ireland; the majority of the Irish people preferred James to William. The Irish were bent on separation from England and determined to obtain home rule and to have James for their king. James was not unwilling. There seemed to be but little difficulty in the way of effecting a separation of Ireland from England. Tyrconnel, one of James' creatures, was in the position of Supreme Governor—the army were for him—the majority of the people were on his side. At the time there was a population of 1,000,000 Roman Catholics and 200,000 Protestants. Ireland once in his undisputed possession James thought there would be a possibility of making a basis of operation for the RECOVERY OF ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND.

FOR THE SAKE OF THE PRINCIPLES

ENTHRONED AS KING AND QUEEN

Troops were sent from Ireland by Tyrconnell to forward the cause of James in England. Troops had been sent from Dublin for this purpose. Native troops—raw recruits—were enlisted to take their places. These native troops—officers and men—were all Romanists. Tyrconnell's policy had been to fill every office in the country, ecclesiastical civil and military, with popish officers. The garrison at Londonderry, which was largely Protestant, had been removed to Dublin to fill the places of those sent to Great Britain to assist James in his struggle against the Prince of Orange. The troops thus removed from Derry were to be replaced by troops enlisted a few days before. These were to a man Roman Catholics. They were called the "Redshanks." It was against their entrance into the city that the gates were closed. This was the first step in the opposition to James. This was the beginning of the struggle that ended with the battle of the Boyne. Those who began the campaign than those at Drogheda who ended it. The struggle as you all know was a fight for civil and religious liberty—for liberty to worship the God of heaven according to the dictates of conscience. It was a fight for life, for had the cause of James prevailed, the slaughter of thousands and ten thousands of the protestants would have followed as a natural result. We know what persecution and bloodshed, under the sanction of Rome, had preceded that period. Not yet 50 years had elapsed since the slaughter of the protestants, under the rebellion of O'Niell in 1641. You have heard of the fires of Smithfield. It is a doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church that heritics are to be destroyed for the good of the church. All are heretics you know who do not believe the doctrines of the Church of Rome. This means death to all protestants in such places as the church possesses the power. Father Chiniquy has shown us again and again that this is the teaching of the Church of Rome. The Romanists thought they were doing good service, when they were slaughtering the Christians of France, of Piedmont, of Ireland. The Council of Trent declared that all heretics were to be delivered to the secular powers to be punished, and these secular powers were sworn to extirpate and destroy all thus delivered into their hands.

WERE STILL MORE NOBLE

THESE LAWS ARE STILL UNREPEALED.

History has shown that they have been faithfully executed. After the massacre of St. Bartholemew a medal was struck by order of the Pope in grateful remembrance of the event. Now, that was Popery as she then was; that is Popery as she would be now if she had the power. She claims to be the same—she declares that she is infallible. What was right once, therefore, is right still.

You know what her doctrines are. If you would escape her hands, should she ever come into power again, you must believe in the worship of the Virgin, the worship of angels, the doctrine of penance, of purgatory, of extreme unction. You must believe that the bread and wine of the sacrament are the real body and blood of Christ. You must believe in the infallibility of the Pope. You must give up your Bibles and your hope of salvation through the blood and death of the Lord Jesus Christ alone. Had James been victorious, first in Ireland, and then in Scotland, and England, your forefathers might have had to do all this—that is do it or die. The triumph then of the Protestant cause under William, Prince of Orange, 195 years ago, is worthy of celebration.

WHAT SHOULD BE THE ATTITUDE of Protestants towards Romanists now? The triumph has been obtained. Are we to glory over them? Are we to flaunt our flags in their faces as often as possible and send them to perdition? Surely not. The people themselves are not to be hated and cursed and trampled upon. They are not responsible. It is the system of Popery that we are to despise and abhor. Our duty to the men and women themselves is to seek to do them all the good that we can—seek to bring them to a knowledge of the truth—to bring them over to our own way of thinking, which we believe to be the right way, because the doctrines of the Protestant Church are the doctrines of the Bible.

Do you say that this is a hopeless task? Why? What has been done once before can be done again. What were our forefathers once? What was the state of the whole world once? What was the state of the whole world before the days of Luther, Melancthon, Knox and Calvin. Popery reigned triumphant everywhere. But a change came. In many places Protestantism swept like a flood over the land. If so before why not again?

The different churches are trying to bring the Romanists over to the adoption of Protestant views and they are meeting with wonderful success. Fifty years ago in Lower Canada there was of French Canadians. Now, what do we see? I do not know what other branches of the Protestant church have done. I will refer you to the history of our own (the Presbyterian) for the last ten years. The following will show the progress made:—

NOT A SINGLE PROTESTANT CHURCH

	1875.	1885.
Number of fields worked.....	8	33
Number of preaching stations..	12	75
Number of church buildings...	3	27
Number of ordained missionaries.....	3	20
Number of unordained missionaries and teachers.....	14	42
Number of families connected with the churches....about	200	1,091
Number of communicants connected with the churches, about	230	1,128
Number of pupils attending mission schools.....about	190	707
Total receipts..... "	$6,450	$23,735

Then thousands of converts have left the field—to find employment or to escape persecution. These are chiefly found in the United States.

For the only French Protestant paper published in Canada there are as many subscribers from the States as in Canada itself.

This is encouraging progress. It is but a foretaste of what the future is to be.

ANOTHER ELEMENT OF ENCOURAGEMENT

is:—

The character of the material on which you have to work.

(1) There is ample scope. The field is wide. In the Dominion, alone, there is a population of 1,300,000 French Canadians. You will not soon therefore run out of work if all these are to be brought under the influence of the gospel.

Another character of the material is:—

The preparedness of the people for the gospel.

This we know from the reports of the colporteurs given us from time to time through the pages of the Record. The Bible is willingly received—purchased and eagerly read. Persecution of the Bible readers and missionaries has all but ceased, because the priest can get so few to consent to do his work. This is a great change within a few years.

It seems to be in our own Dominion as it is in France itself. You have heard of the McAll mission in France, of the amazing success which that Congregationalist minister from England is now meeting with in Paris and other places in old France. The work began 1872 in one hall in Paris. In 1880, six years after, there were 50 mission halls in the different provinces in connection with the McAll Mission, with an aggregate attendance during the year of 550,000. As there, so here, there is a preparedness for the work.

THE PEOPLE ARE WAITING AND WATCHING and crying for the Gospel.

Another characteristic about the material is:—

That all converts become missionaries themselves. They cannot help it. They cannot but speak the things that they themselves have heard. This is natural. This is what you would expect. This is what witness-bearers testify; colporteurs testify it; Father Chiniquy testifies it. Persecution has scattered the converts abroad, and they go everywhere preaching the Word. The children go from the mission schools to preach the Gospel to parents and neighbours at home, and thus the work goes gloriously on in the name of Christ and by the power of the Holy Ghost.

II. The motives—the same as for other mission work.

(1.) The value of souls. Many may and will be saved in the Church of Rome; but if so, not on account of their teaching, but in spite of it. Justification by faith—salvation by grace are not taught. The worship of angels, the worship of the Virgin, the doctrines of transubstantiation, of penance, of extreme unction, must be soul destroying doctrines. It may be that without the Gospel, but we are bound to carry the Gospel to them notwithstanding.

SOME OF THE HEATHEN WILL BE SAVED

Another motive is (2) patriotism—love of country. This will never become a fair Dominion of ours until the influence of Popery is destroyed. Now she is charged at least with fomenting our rebellions, with swaying our politicians, with controlling our elections, and with rifling our treasuries. If it is so, these are evils of great magnitude; and if it is so, from these we will not be delivered until thousands and hundreds of thousands are brought to the knowledge of the truth, as it is in Jesus Christ.

(3.) Another motive is self-preservation. The French are a prolific people. So are the Irish. They double themselves every 21 years by births alone. The Protestants every 25 years. What will be the fate of Protestants then in 100 years. Popery, you know, is always the same. She will then, indeed have the reins of power, and the days of Smithfield may return.

What is to be done then,

TO SAVE OURSELVES,

or at least our descendants, from the possible danger. No other way than to evangelize these Romanists—to turn the lion into the lamb, the persecutor into the preacher of the faith which he once destroyed.

Here, those of you who wish, have an opportunity of showing your Protestant principles and of giving proof of the sincerity of your devotion to the cause of the Bible.

Melancholy is the view of the Roman Catholic church, which we are thus compelled to take. Truth is turned into a lie. The Son of God is displaced by the Virgin Mary. The creature is worshipped rather than the Creator. This is the church that calls herself the true church, and that now seeks opportunity to rule over the bodies and souls of men.

Will we not lift up our voices against every attempt made to yield to her demands? Will we not say to our politicians "Grant no more concessions to Rome." We will not persecute her, but we will not allow her to persecute us. We will renew resistance to her aggressions in the spirit of our ancestors, if need be, with the sacrifice of our lives, but we will especially fight her

WITH THE SWORD OF THE SPIRIT, which is the word of God.

Let us beware of confounding Romanists with their system. While we abhor the system we should love, pity and pray for the men—ay! even for the Pope himself—that they all may be led by the Father of light into the way of truth.

And let us never forget that it is very possible for us to hate some errors and yet to hug others—to hate popery and yet not to love Christ, to profess attachment to the purest church and yet to die in sin. Personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, personal experience of truth of the Bible and of the power of the Holy Ghost, personal holiness of heart and life will alone entitle us to the name of Christian or afford solid hope in the prospect of that hour when every one of us shall give account of himself to God. Be ye then Christians indeed, stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ maketh us free, and be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

CALLED BACK

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter II.—Continued.

I am grieved to be compelled to gather from her words, that, in spite of the indignation she displayed toward the policemen, her estimate of my condition was the same as theirs. She was particularly grateful to the doctor, whom, I fear, she looked upon as a clever and complaisant practitioner, who had extricated a gentleman from a scrape by a well-timed but untruthful explanation.

"But I never knew a body stop insensible so long after it. Don't ye do it again, Master Gilbert," she concluded.

I did not combat her suspicions. Priscilla was scarcely the one to whom I wished to confide the adventures of the night. By far the simplest way was to say nothing, to leave her to draw her own, and, perhaps, not unnatural conclusions.

"I won't do it again," I said. "Now get me some breakfast. Tea and toast—anything."

She went to do my bidding. It was not that I was hungry. I wanted to be alone for a few minutes to think—or think as well as my aching head would allow.

I recalled everything that had happened since I left the door of my house. The entranced walk, the drunken guide, the song I had heard, and, afterward, those horrible, eloquent sounds and touches. Everything was clear and connected up to the moment the opiate was forced upon me; after that my mind was a blank. Priscilla's tale showed me that during that blank I must have been transported several miles and deposited in the thoroughfare where I was found by the policeman. I saw through the crafty scheme. I had been dropped, insensible, far away from the scene of the crime at which I had been present. How wild and improbable my tale would seem. Would any one believe it?

Then I remember my horror at what I felt streaming over my hand as I lay pinned down upon the fallen man. I called Priscilla.

"Look," I said, holding my right hand toward her, "is it clean—was it clean when you found me?"

"Clean—la, no, Master Gilbert!"

"What was on it?" I asked excitedly.

"All covered with mud, just as if you'd been dabbling in the gutter. The first thing I did when I got you home was to wash your poor hands and face. I hoped it would bring you round—it generally does, you know."

"But my coat-sleeve. The right-hand side. See if anything is on them."

Priscilla laughed. "You haven't got ne'er a right-hand sleeve left. They were cut or torn off above the elbow. Your arm was naked."

Every scrap of circumstantial evidence which would confirm my tale was vanishing away. There would be nothing to support it except the assertion of a blind man, who left his house in the dead of night, secretly, and who was found, several hours afterward, miles away, in such a state that the guardians of the public morals were compelled to take charge of him.

Yet I could not remain silent with the knowledge of such a crime weighing on my mind. The next day I had entirely recovered from the effects of the opiate, and after consideration sent for my solicitor. He was a confidential friend, and I resolved to be guided by his advice. In a very short time I found it was hopeless to think of carrying conviction to his mind. He listened gravely, giving vent to "Well, well!" "Bless my soul!" "Shocking!" and other set expressions of surprise, but I knew he was only humoring me, and looked upon the whole thing as a delusion. I have no doubt that Priscilla had been talking to him and telling him all she knew. His incredulity annoyed me, so I told him, testily, I should say no more about the affair.

"Well, I wouldn't if I were you," he said.

"You don't believe me?"

"I believe you are saying what you think is true; but if you ask me, my opinion is that you walked in your sleep and dreamed all this."

Too cross to argue with him, I took his advice, so far as he was concerned, and said no more about it. Afterward I tried another friend with a similar result. If those who had known me from childhood would not believe me, how could I expect strangers to do so? Everything I had to reveal was so vague and unsupported. I could not even fix upon the spot where the crime was committed. I had ascertained that no house in Walpole street could be opened by a key similar to mine. There was no other street of that name anywhere near. My friend with the unsteady feet must have misunderstood me and conducted me to another row of houses.

I thought, at one time, of advertising and asking him to communicate with me, but I could not word a request which should be intelligible to him, without, perchance, exciting the suspicions of those who were concerned in the crime. Even now, if they had discovered my true name and abode, there might be some one on the watch for any movement I might make. I had been spared once, but no mercy would be shown me a second time. Why should I risk my life by making disclosures which would not be believed—accusations against men who were unknown to me? What good could I do? By now the assassins must have hidden all trace of the crime, and made good their retreat. Why should I face the ridicule which must attach to such a tale as mine, the truth of which I could not prove? No; let the horrors of that night be as a dream. Let them fade and be forgotten.

Soon I have something else to think of; something that may well drive such dismal memories from my mind. Hope has become certainty. I am almost delirious with delight. Science has triumphed! My defeated foe has left me. I am told his return is almost beyond possibility. The world is light again! I can see!

But my cure was a long and tedious affair. Both eyes were operated upon. First one, and, when the success of that operation was assured, the other. It was months before I was allowed to emerge altogether from darkness. Light was doled out to me sparingly and cautiously. What did that matter so long that I knew there was light again for me? I was patient, very patient and grateful. I followed Mr. Jay's instructions to the letter, knowing I should reap the reward of so doing.

My case had been treated by the simplest and safest method of operation—the one which is always chosen when [illegible] the nature of the disease and the age of the patient permits—solution of absorption it is termed. When it was all over, and all danger of inflammation at an end; when I found that by the aid of strong convex glasses I could see well enough for all ordinary purposes, Mr. Jay congratulated both himself and me. It promised, he said, to be the most thoroughly successful cure he had ever taken part in. It must have been something above the common, as I am informed that every book on the eye which has since been published cites my case as an example of what may be done.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The favorite tipple in Washington is hot apple toddy, a beverage composed of baked apple, hot water, sugar and Jersey electricity.

Contrary to the generally received opinion, M. Aime concludes from experiments conducted on himself that whole meal or household bread, containing all the ingredients of the grain, is less wholesome and more indigestible than pure white bread made of the flour alone.

Feeding fleas in an animal show in Paris is the occupation of Mlle. Emma. She bares her shapely arms and sets a lot of fleas free on them. They fed their fill of her warm blood, and then they were put to work again drawing carriages and cannons weighing over so many hundred times more than their little selves.

Although Kansas has for eleven years had a capital punishment law, nobody has been hanged except by lynchers. Under the statute a person sentenced to death is first imprisoned a year in the penitentiary, and if at that time the death warrant is signed by the Governor, the execution takes place; but otherwise the imprisonment continues.

The cariole is the Norwegian farmer's gig, consisting of a narrow seat supported on a wooden frame by two cross-bars of wood, which are fixed in the shafts and serve as rude springs, with behind it a horizontal board, on which the traveler's small box or portmanteau is deposited, and where the postboy (skydsgut) perches as best he can.

The author of a new Boston novel seems fond of red. One of the young men in the book has "a red-tanned face and amber hair;" another character is a college professor who "had his celebrity under a reddish beard;" a third has a complexion naturally crimson, and a fourth in "riding by leaves an impression of a long scarlet mustache."

A 7-year-old girl living on West street is a good reader and very fond of poetry. A few days ago a gentleman of 80 years called on her grandfather who is 84 years old. The little girl, wishing to entertain them, brought out her book of poems and selected one which she thought would please them, as it referred to old men, entitled, "What can an old man do but die?" every verse ending with that cheerful sentence. The hearty laugh that followed from the two hale and hearty old gentlemen satisfied her that her efforts were appreciated.—Danbury News.

Rev. Thomas Timmins, while in attendance at the Humane Association meetings in this city, organized two "Boards of Mercy." The object is to protect all creatures from cruel treatment. Mr. Lee Brown, of Chicago, related an incident which occurred in one of the schools there while Rev. Timmins was at work. The pledge was written on the black-board, and all the pupils but one held up their hands to indorse it. The young hopeful replied: "Well, I'll tell you. Bill Daley sauced me yesterday and smashed my face, and I want to lick him first and then I'll join."—Pittsburg Times.

A Montpelier five-year-old of our acquaintance was once invited, with the rest of the family, to take tea at the house of a friend. The head of the family had taken pains to prepare a tempting supper for his guests, and when all were seated at the table and it came five-year-old's turn to be helped the host said: "Well, Johnny, what will you have?" Johnny looked over the table a minute and then made this crushing reply: "When I am at home and don't see anything good to eat on the table I have crackers and milk, and I guess I'll have crackers and milk now."—St. Albans (Vt.) Messenger.

The ophthalmia of early infancy has been proved to be the most certainly curable of all diseases, and yet its neglect results in more cases of hopeless blindness than any other trouble to which the eye may be subjected. An investigation of twenty-two blind asylums in Germany alone has shown that one-third of the inmates would be in full possession of their sight but for the terrible effect of neglected ophthalmia, and in England also a similar condition of affairs has been developed. Blindness is for the individual a catastrophe and for the community a burden; therefore the inspectors of the poor in all the large European cities have been required to distribute cards giving simple instructions to mothers enabling them to recognise the first symptoms of ophthalmia and to understand its gravity.

FRIDAY, JULY 24, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

"The Poets and Poetry of Canada."

In to-morrow's issue will appear the article on Mrs. Moodie, to which reference was made a few days ago. This biographical sketch will be interesting, from a local point of view, Mrs. Moodie having resided many years at Lakefield.

Paying the Volunteers.

The boys who have so gallantly held up the Peterborough end of the burthen in the Northwest troubles were paid off to-day at the Drill Shed. Each private was admitted in turn, and emerged with a cheque on the Montreal Bank for the sum of $60.00. The non-commissioned officers received a proportionate advance.

Willow and Wicket.

The Peterborough cricketers will play a match to-morrow afternoon in Ashburnham. Sides will be chosen, and the contesting elevens will represent Canada and the Old Country. From the bowling which some of the Old Country boys have been doing recently, we predict for them success in the match.

Foreign Bicyclists.

Our Newcastle visitors have been taking in the town since their arrival in first class order. Mr. Gibson was interviewed yesterday and he says that he intends to make it as hot as possible for his opponent in the race which takes place to-night at the P. A. A. grounds. In the evening the visitors will occupy the floor at the Lansdowne rink for a short time.

Good-bye, John.

At the meeting of the Town Council last night a motion to grant John Smith—the man with the big pants—a sum of money, sufficient to buy a ticket to some foreign part, was carried unanimously. We feel extremely sorry to part with Mr. Pants, and hope the next time he visits our town, that he will enter with a much less spread of canvas than that which he has been sporting here for the past ten months.

Methodist Choir Picnic.

The members of the George Street Methodist Choir held their excursion and picnic yesterday. About fifty in all drove to Bridgenorth in the morning. They then embarked on the steamer Maple Leaf and sailed to Oak Orchard, where an exceedingly pleasant day's enjoyment was spent. The party left the picnic grounds early in the evening and got back to town about 9 o'clock, all well pleased with the day's outing.

Philharmonic Society.

Prof. Parker and Mr. Hampshire, organists and choirmasters of St. Paul's and St. John's churches, respectively, intend calling a meeting shortly to take steps for the organization of a Philharmonic Society. We hope their efforts will be successful, and if the abundant musical talent of Peterborough can be enlisted and organized, a strong and excellent musical society will be established. Both gentlemen are masters in their profession, and will be able to successfully conduct such an organization.

Pick Pockets.

During the progress of the match with the Uxbridge team yesterday, some mean sneak entered the dressing room, underneath the grand stand, and relieved the pockets of the players of whatever surplus change they possessed. When the alarm was given that thieves had been around, it was comical to see the boys "go down" to see what they had lost. The tone of the general conversation which followed, was anything but of Gospel hymn character, and had the person been found out then and there, he would have had a narrow escape from lynching.

Lacrosse.

The Peterborough Boys Win after a Hard Tussle.

The match played yesterday on the grounds at the Driving Park was a surprise party to two hundred spectators who lined the small fence to witness it. The Uxbridge twelve arrived with the excursion party at 11.50 a. m., and at two o'clock drove to the grounds and attired themselves in their pretty costumes of old gold and navy shirts and blue knickers, preparatory to taking the field. Amongst them were noticed quite a number of the faces that appeared here two years ago to contest for the central district medal. At twenty minutes to three o'clock the home representatives made their appearance, and the two teams took up their positions on the field. Joe Joyal captained the local twelve, and Tom Anderson performed the same function for the visitors. J. Lang and W. Delaney umpired at the east and west ends respectively, and Mr. M. Giroux was mutually agreed upon as referee. The following are the names of the teams :

Churchill	Goal	Stevenson
Mitchell	Point	Giroux
Kirby	Cover Point	Canning
Weeks	1st Defence	Begley
Long	2nd Defence	McAvella
Pierce	3rd Defence	Fortye
Tucker	Centre	Sheehy
Scott	3rd Home	Kelly
Morrison	2nd Home	Mooney
Fralick	1st Home	Henderson
Simpson	Outside Home	Moscrip
Graham	Inside Home	Neil

At the face Kelly pounced on the ball after the pull was made, and after some pretty manoeuvering passed the rubber to Mooney who transferred it to Joe Henderson. Joe made a swift shot and at the same time Harry Neil knocked down the goal-keeper's stick and the first game was chalked down for the Peterborough's. Time 2 minutes.

THE SECOND GAME

was immediately commenced, and in this the contest was much of the same character as the first. Neil, Mooney, Begley and Moscrip did good play, and after pegging at the visitor's goal for three minutes, the ball was put through on a drop, which came from behind the goals.

The third game was a surprise to the home team. The visitors played a good and plucky game, and deserved credit for the way they showed up. After thirteen minutes play, the ball was sent flying towards the spot where Stevenson stood, by Tucker, and W. Delaney's raised hand showed that they had scored.

The fourth game was taken by the visitors in good style. Encouraged by the result of the previous game they knuckled down to their work and succeeded in scoring after 6 minutes play. In the the home team waked up. Kelly got the rubber a very short time after the face, and passed it to Neil. who in turn delivered it to Henderson ; Joe made a good shot which was stopped by Kirby, and sent to the other end of the field where Giroux and Stevenson resented its entrance through the Peterborough goal. The ball was sent back to the visitors' stronghold and remained there until it was sent through by Neil, after about four minutes' play. The usual cheers were given, and the visitors not having much time to spare, left for their hotel to prepare for their departure, which was taken with the regular train on the G.T.R. at 5.15 p.m. They seemed well satisfied with the result of the game and think they can "down" their opponents in yesterday's match. We wonder if they can.

School Board Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the School Board to-night to consider the estimates for the current school year.

This is the Night.

The grand bicycle race between Gibson of Peterborough, and Kent of Newcastle, takes place to-night, on the P. A. A. A. grounds. It will be a splendid race and well worth seeing.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Moderate to fresh east and south winds ; fair warm weather with storms in a few localities to-night.

Young Men's Reform Association.

A meeting for the purpose of organizing a Young Men's Reform Association will be held in Mr. E. W. Cox's office (in rear of the telegraph office) on Tuesday evening next, July 28th. We expect to see a large attendance on the occasion.

St. Paul's S. S. Picnic.

The children of the Sunday School in connection with St. Paul's Presbyterian Church 'excurted' yesterday down the Otonabee river as far as Mr. Mat. Johnston's farm, which grounds was very kindly placed at their disposal. A very pleasant afternoon was spent by the children, who were assisted in carrying out their programme of races, jumping, &c., by their teachers and a large number of their friends who mustered for the occasion. The party arrived at the wharf in Peterborough at 8 p. m.

Sport at the Lansdowne.

To-night, at the Lansdowne Roller Rink, J. Shevlin, of this town, will contest a two-mile race with Herbert Sweetser, of Boston, for a gold medal. A boys race will also take place for a silver cup. The Newcastle bicyclists, accompanied by the local bikes, will make their appearance on the floor and parade. Races will commence at 9 o'clock sharp ; bicycle parade at 9.30. Admission, 10 cents ; bicyclists with bikes, free. The Fire Brigade Band will be present.

"El Padre" Cigars.

Universally acknowledged to be the finest 10c. cigar manufactured. Don't be persuaded to take other brands. No chemicals or artificial flavourings used. 13d-25w-1y

Niagara Falls Excursion.

The Firemen's excursion to Niagara Falls on Civic Holiday promises to be the grandest of the season. The train will leave the C. P. R. station at 6 a. m. sharp, and arrive in Toronto in time to have the excursionists embark on the Chicora for the Falls at 9 o'clock. Returning, the boat will leave the Falls at 5 p. m. and arrive in Toronto at 7, when the C. P. R. train will again be taken by the excursionists, who will arrive home at 11 o'clock. Return tickets to the halls, good for three days, only $2.50. Tickets will be issued to Toronto and return for $2.00.

Fatal Accident.

On Tuesday last Patrick McCarthy, a farmer living on lot No. 8, 6th concession, Douro, drove into town, accompanied by his neice, who came in to spend a short time in Peterborough. He drove the young lady to her destination, in the third ward, and on returning, when near W. Hamilton's foundry his horse was frightened by the train coming from Lindsay, and after running for some distance, overturned the buggy, throwing Mr. McCarthy violently to the ground. He did not seem to be much hurt, however, and was able to walk as far as Wilson's hotel on Hunter street, where he told the proprietor of the accident, and evinced more anxiety for the injuries which his horse received than for his own. Towards evening, some friends drove in to town and conveyed the injured man to his residence, where he was taken suddenly ill, and despite the exertions of Dr. O'Shea, expired yesterday. He had been sleeping soundly for some time, and his attendants on going to his bedside, after an absence of some time, found him dead. His remains will be interred in the Catholic cemetery, Douro, to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

YOUNG MEN, ATTEND.

The hope of Canada is her young men. Young men have just returned home after victoriously fighting her battles. There is still another battle to be waged against the misgovernment and sinful extravagance which is fast exhausting her resources and discounting her future. It is young men that are needed to throw their energies into the political contest, and we are sure the Liberal young men of Peterborough will not be wanting. The meeting to be held on Tuesday evening, July 28th, at 8 o'clock, in Mr. H. W. Cox's office, in rear of the telegraph office, should bring together a large number of young men to consider the preliminaries necessary to the formation of a Young Men's Reform Club. It is not known how soon the services of such an organization may be needed. It is well known, however, how the contest was hurried on in Grenville, and how the writ was issued to fill Col. Williams' seat, even before the hero of Batoche was laid in the earth. It is well, therefore, to be prepared, and we hope the young Liberals of Peterborough will not delay in giving effect to the proposal to form a Young Men's Liberal Club. Let there be a large rally at the meeting next Tuesday evening. Such an organization will find work cut out for it the moment it is formed.

Board of Education.

A Special Meeting—The Estimates Submitted.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held on Friday evening.

There were present the Chairman, James Stevenson, Esq., and Messrs. Dumble, Millar, Errett, Cox, Denne, Stratton, Rutherford, Weir, Wrighton and Sawers.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Mr. H. K. Coleman, Principal of the Public Schools, acknowledging with sincere thanks the increased salary granted him.—Received.

An application for increased remuneration from Mr. W. A. Morrow, Secretary-Treasurer, an account of additional services recently required, and an application for increase of salary from Mr. Horning were referred to the Finance Committee.

ACCOUNTS.

An account from Dr. Tassie for services as examiner, amounting to $12.00, and one from the Auburn School for $16.00 were ordered to be paid.

FINANCE REPORT.

The Committee on Finance reported as follows:

GENTLEMEN,—Your Finance Committee beg to report that they have carefully considered the estimated receipts and expenditures for the year, and in connection therewith, present the accompanying statement, which shows that the sum of $10,675 will required to be levied for school purposes, (being $8,975 for public schools, and $3,700 for the Collegiate Institute).

When it is considered that provision has been made for a deficiency of $365, from last year, and that the schools are being maintained with a greater degree of efficiency than in the past, it is a matter of congratulation that this Board manages the school funds so carefully and well.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MELVILLE MILLAR, Chairman.

The report was adopted.

DEMAND FOR BALANCE DUE.

Moved by Mr. Dumble, seconded by Mr. Errett, that the Secretary-Treasurer be requested to demand and obtain from the Town Treasurer the share of the penalties collected from delinquent ratepayers in respect of the monies raised from Protestant ratepayers for public school purposes, and from all rate-payers for the high school purposes—Carried.

HIGH SCHOOL PREMISES.

Moved by Mr. Dumble, seconded by Mr. Errett,—That inasmuch as the High School is charged $700 a year rental for the use of the building occupied for High School purposes, and much inconvenience is suffered by reason of the inadequateness of the High School accommodation; and inasmuch as the High School would be more efficiently conducted in a separate and more suitable building, and away from interruptions and annoyances incident to the proximity of the Central Public School, with 550 pupils:—Be it therefore resolved that the matter of providing proper High School accommodation for a Collegiate Institute be referred to a committee to consist of the Chairman, Messrs. Stratton, Errett, Millar, Wrighton, Rutherford, Denne and the mover, to consider the matter and report to this Board.—Lost.

The Board then adjourned.

Personal.

We have received from the Government office of the State of Missouri a copy of the report of the State Veterinanan, Dr. Paul Paguin, a former resident of Peterborough.

The Grand Forks, Dakota, Daily Herald contains the following:—"Mr. W. Gilbert, of Chicago, formerly of Peterborough, Ont., and an old friend and boon companion of Harry DeLaney, arrived in the city last evening and will remain a short time. He is quite captivated with the country and has about decided to purchase some of the fertile and inexhaustible soil near Grand Forks. He is as lively as you meet them, and as full of business and enthusiasm."

A Terrible Assault.

A Lakefield Husband Beats and Hacks His Wife.

A Lakefield correspondent sends us the following particulars of what may yet prove a terrible tragedy:—For some time past it appears that Harvey Pearson has been making things exceedingly unpleasant for his wife by his drinking habits and abusive treatment of her. On Thursday last he crowned his career of cruelty, and perhaps reached the end of his tether. On that night he was out for a carouse in the village and returned home in an intoxicated condition and began his usual course of treatment of his wife, only improving on his past experience and record of brutality. With a heavy four-legged milking stool he struck his unfortunate wife a cutting and bruising the flesh. The blow felled her to the ground. She received also a terrible cut on the side of the head, severing the temporal artery. It had evidently been made with an axe, for when the neighbors, attracted by the screams that preceded the assault, hurried to the spot, an axe was found lying close beside Mrs. Pearson, as she lay stunned and unconscious, and the gash corresponded to the width of the blade of the axe. Mr. George Cochrane arrested the husband and took him before a magistrate in Lakefield, but as the latter had no blanks and as there was no lock-up in the village, the man was released. He was, however, arrested the following morning and yesterday afternoon was brought before Mr. Dumble, Police Magistrate in Peterborough, and was remanded for one week.

The unfortunate wife is under the medical care of Dr. Caldwell and Dr. Armour, and her condition is reported to be a precarious one.

Court House Park.

The work of improvement still goes on at this now beautiful resort. The walks have all been completed, and the place presents a charming and attractive appearance. The flowers in the pots are growing finely, and just beginning to bloom freely. When the new sward that has been laid down, and the portions grassed, shall have become clothed in green, as they soon will be, this portion will be a rarely beautiful spot, while the upper portion of the park, with its numerous fine shade trees, already forms a most attractive and pleasant resort. The boulevard in front of the grounds will be sodded by this evening, adding greatly to the appearance of the front. Messrs. Nesbitt & Ray, with a corps of five or six prisoners from the jail, are removing the fence from the sides of the park, as far up as the walk that crosses it in line with the main fountain. The effect of this will be to add greatly to the apparent extent of the grounds. Some difficulty to start with is experienced in inducing persons to "keep off the grass" in the lower portion of the grounds, one considerate individual refusing to come off the grass, on the grounds that he "paid for it," till the hose was turned on him. When the public become accustomed to the park, and some are made an example of, no trouble of any account need be feared on this score.

MISCELLANEOUS.

This is good for a waif: Said a fond mother at the table of a fashionable Chicago hotel, the other day, "Do you know my little son, that the word menu is French for bill of fare?" "O, yes, mamma," was the assuring reply, "meau it!" The mother fainted right there. She was afraid the boy would grow up to be a paragraph editor.

The police in all parts of England are making raids upon bakers, and taking legal proceedings in cases where the bread has been sold deficient in weight. There is a widespread feeling that the profits of bakers are unusually high just now, owing to the low price of wheat.

A St. Louis man has discovered that cat-fish skin makes elegant leather, and proposes to get out a patent and make a fortune. He uses it for everything, for shoe-laces to slippers, cabas, pocket-books and fancy pocket-case covers. The leather is light grey in color, very soft and tough.

The County of Los Angeles has increased in population faster than any other county in California, having gained 31,619 souls in the last four years. No other county in the state has gained half as much. The fineness of the climate and richness of the soil are given as the reason.

The second thimble centenary has just been celebrated in Amsterdam. The first thimble was made in October, 1684, by a goldsmith, Van Renscholten, whose idea in the manufacture of the pretty conceit was to protect the fingers of his ladylove. The English were the first to adopt the new invention.

The total number of negroes in the United States is estimated at 6,000,000, or one-eighth of the entire population. Only seven Northern States have a higher colored population than 90,000, and of these the highest is Pennsylvania, with 65,000. The census indicated the fact that the white population doubles itself in every twenty-five years, while the negro does the same in every twenty years. From these figures a writer in the North American Review, making allowance for foreign and Northern immigration, concludes that in 100 years the negroes in every Southern State will be double the number of whites.

Buchanan Read's poem describing Sheridan's ride from Winchester is said by a friend of the latter to have become the bane of his existence. In the popular mind that little jaunt on horseback is his only achievement. The rest of his gallant services have been thrown into oblivion, so far as the knowledge of the masses is concerned. Women especially worry him almost crazy on the subject. He is bound, in common politeness, to answer their questions about it, and unnumbered are the albums in which he has been compelled to write a verse of the poem over his signature. He used to decline to do this, on the ground that it was not modest, but he found that his scruples were not appreciated, and so he now scribbles a couplet, which glorifies the horse only, with no mention of the rider.

An Invitation to Dinner.

The story is told that the playing of a celebrated violinist very much impressed one of the ladies of the audience, a well-known society leader, and she caused the musician to be presented to her.

"I was delighted with your wonderful music, Mr. S.," the lady said, "quite carried away with it, in fact."

The musician was charmed.

"If you have no other engagements for Thursday evening," the lady went on, "I would be pleased to have you dine with us."

He had no other engagements.

"And be sure and bring your violin," she added.

"Well, madam," Mr. S. replied, "I hardly think that will be necessary; [illegible]"

The Boston Gazette thus speaks of a new use for the telephone: "Sammy, a bright boy, 4 years old, living in Western Massachusetts, is constantly attended by his faithful shepherd dog, Jack, whose obedience to his young master's orders is immediate and implicit. The house of the lad's grandmother is connected by a telephone with that in which Sammy lives. The boy delights to dine with his grandmother, and almost daily that worthy woman is summoned by the sharp ring of the telephone bell to answer the importunate question: 'may I come up to dinner to-day, grandma?' When she, with patience long tried, answers: 'No, not to-day, I am too busy,' Sammy calmly commands the dog to mount to the instrument by a chair which is always kept ready for this emergency, saying: 'Now, Jack, howl! Bark, Jack!' Then the grandmother's house resounds with the din, and the howling and barking echoes through the chambers with distracting effect, until at last, in utter despair, and guided by past experience in yielding to the inevitable, the wished-for consent is given, and both the obedient dog and his ingenious young master dine out.

An Indian Girl.

She was not too tall, and was finely formed, though want of food had marred the once rounded contour of her young and shapely limbs. Her eyes were large, lustrous, full of nature's fire and brightness. Her eyebrows were dark as her hair, and perfectly arched. Her lips were full, and of a vivid red. Her teeth—like those of most Indians—were beautifully regular and brilliantly white, though tooth-brush had never touched them. They seemed, however, like all Indian teeth, to be made to eat raw flesh. I cannot better describe Indian teeth. Her cheeks and her forehead were touched with the vermillion dye the squaws use for the purpose of personal adornment; for they, too, like too many of their white sisters endeavor to improve on nature. Her matted hair hung in long elf locks and inextricable tangles; it was virgin of a comb. She looked like a savage edition of a head I have seen among Julian's crayon studies. Her dusky arms were bare. A few brass rings ornamented her wrists. Her dress was composed of two rectangular pieces of a dark and coarse woolen stuff bordered with red; the latter is a favorite color with Indians. The pieces were joined at one end, a place being left open for the head to go through. A piece of buckskin bound them about the waist. Her feet were small and well-formed, but truth compels me to state that they were thickly incrusted with the yellow mud of the Olenega. The nearest approach to a washing they ever got was when her path lay across a brook which she was compelled to ford. Her hands, alas! were covered with dirt and clay, for it was a part of my little no-heroine's daily labor to dig the papa, or Navajo potato, with her young fingers. I should have hesitated to lend her my cloak or shawl if I intended to wear it again. And if I were compelled to don it again after she had worn it, I would cause it to do duty some days as a horse-cloth first. This, I have learned from old frontiersmen, from Mexican scouts, guides, etc., removes the unpleasant consequences of Indian wear. The perfume of the wild red rose was not particularly agreeable. Judging from a dancing-school point of view her step was not graceful. Like all Indians and other untutored children of nature, she turned out her heels and turned in her toes. United Service.

A diver engaged in diving operations off the coast of Gibraltar, under Apes Hill, with the object of ascertaining the whereabouts of a recent wreck, has discovered at the bottom from eighty to one hundred large guns, mostly 24 and 32 pounders, and also two large anchors. They are supposed to have belonged to some large line of battle ship which sunk in the old war, possibly after the battle of Trafalgar. As there was no apparatus for the purpose, none of the guns were brought up, so it has not been possible to ascertain their ex[illegible]

Mrs. Susanna Moodie.

"The busy shuttle comes and goes
Across the rhymes, and deftly weaves
A tissue out of autumn leaves,
With here a thistle, there a rose."
—Aldrich, Cloth of Gold.

There are few famous in the literature of our country better known than the lady whose name appears at the head of this article. One of Mrs. Moodie's book, at least, has been read perhaps more than any other work published in Canada. We refer to "Roughing it in the Bush," which went through several editions, and is even yet widely circulated.

Mrs. Moodie resided so long in close proximity to Peterborough; she was so generally well known to, and respected by our citizens, and has still so many relatives in the neighborhood that in the pursuance of our scheme, we fancy this sketch at any rate will not want appreciative readers. In alluding to the national literature of Canada, it would be just feasible to pass by the name of Susanna Moodie, as to place the play of Hamlet on the stage with the principle character left out. She was one of the pioneer writers of Canada and published a little book of poems more than half a century ago. For many years she devoted her talents entirely to literature, and to enumerate her works in both prose and poetry would make a very considerable list. She was also an extensive contributor to the periodicals both of Great Britain and Canada.

Mrs. Moodie was the daughter of Thomas Strickland, Esq., Reydon Hall, Suffolk, and was born on the 6th of December, 1803. Her father was a very talented man and an extensive traveller. He was a gentleman of education and refined taste, with ample means to gratify his inclinations. He devoted himself with conspicuous ardour to the education of his children, and did all within his power to engraft within them a love of literature. His efforts met with abundant success. His family consisted of two sons and six daughters, all of whom, we believe, greatly distinguished themselves either in literature or art. Mrs. Moodie's two sisters, Agnes and Elizabeth Strickland, gained a very enviable and world-wide reputation by the publication of "The Queens of England." Another sister, Mrs. Traill, also a voluminous writer, and the first of her gifted family who gained a reputation by her pen, still lives at Lakefield. Only last year she contributed another valuable work to the literature of her adopted country, "Plant Life in Canada," which is dedicated to the present Governor-General of the Dominion, and which received high encomiums from the press.

It is difficult to realize that Mrs. Moodie, who only died a few months ago, was born in the very year when Napoleon Bonaparte was in his prime, and two years after Nelson's great victory at Copenhagen. Such a fact seems to connect the present generation with the past, much more closely than we usually imagine can be the case.

When Mrs. Moodie was in her thirteenth year her father died. Shortly afterwards she began writing for the press, generally in the shape of short poems and tales for children, which appeared in the current British annuals and other periodicals. In 1820 she produced her first book, a juvenile tale, entitled, "Spartacus, or the Slave's Struggle for Freedom," and from this date until 1826 she wrote and published six additional works, making seven within the space of six years.

While in London, and before embarking for Canada, she lived for a short time in the house of the poet, Pringle, then the resort of many well-known literary celebrities. Among them, Mrs. Moodie met both Carlyle and Thackeray, of whom she had a very lively recollection, the latter evidently not being an especial favorite with our authoress.

In 1829 she married Lieut. John W. D. Moodie, a half-pay officer in the 21st Regiment of Fusiliers, and three years afterwards they emigrated to Canada.

They began life here on a farm near Port Hope which they worked for a very short time, afterwards moving to the township of Douro, near Lakefield, a place well known to many readers of the EXAMINER. Here they remained for about eight years and being totally ignorant of life in the bush the young couple had many a trial and hardship to pass through. These form the groundwork of the book to which we have already referred, "Roughing it in the Bush," and were narrated in such vivid language and in a style so graphic and realistic, that not a few, we believe, were deterred from emigrating to Canada through its perusal. In this respect, certainly, the book at that time did harm, although hardships of the kind it related have not been within the bounds of possibility for many years past. Good roads, railways and all the appliances of civilization which follow in the wake of settlement, and indeed now-a-days precede it, make such things impossible now, even in the most remote and backward districts of Canada.

"Roughing it in the Bush" was written while Mr. Moodie was absent from home in connection with the rebellion of 1837-'38. Concerning it, one of the colonial magazines said at the time, "Mrs. Moodie is unquestionably one of the most distinguished pioneers of Canadian literature. She has wrought hard with heart and hand to advance her adopted land in the republic of letters, and the work of which we are speaking will add fresh laurels to her already goodly coronet of merit." Her other works and the dates of their publication are as follows:—"Enthusiasm and Other Poems," 1830; "Mark Hurdlestone" and "Life in the Clearings," 1853; "Flora Lindsay" and "Matrimonial Speculations," 1854; "Geoffrey Moncton," 1856 and "Dorothy Chance," 1867. During its existence, Mrs. Moodie was one of the principal contributors to the Literary Garland, Montreal, and for some years edited the Victoria Magazine, at Belleville.

In 1839 Major Moodie, as he was generally called, was appointed Sheriff of what is now the County of Hastings, and went to reside at Belleville, where he remained up to the date of his death in 1869. When the partner of her joys and sorrows had passed away, Mrs. Moodie left her Belleville home, residing occasionally with her sister, Mrs. Traill, at Lakefield, at times with her son or daughter in Toronto, and also, at rare intervals, with another gifted daughter, Mrs. Chamberlain, in Ottawa. Her death occurred at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. J. J. Vickers, Wilton Crescent, Toronto, on Wednesday, April 8th, 1885. For many months before her end her powers, both of mind and body, were gradually becoming weaker, and she was occasionally unconscious of what was passing around her.

She was of a bright, kindly disposition, a skilful conversationist, an earnest lover of Canada, notwithstanding all her rough experiences of it, always willing to give advice and encouragement to those struggling in the bye-ways of literature, and exceedingly enthusiastic over the future of her adopted country, in all things pertaining to its advancement and prosperity.

As a faithful and skilful pioneer and helper in establishing a national literature in this country, her name should be gratefully remembered by all who desire to see this fair Dominion prosper in everything which makes a nation great.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.

At a meeting of the general committee and others, in the council chamber, on Thursday afternoon, it was decided to postpone the holding of the civic holiday until Tuesday, Sept. 1st, as the farmers are now in the midst of their harvest, and so many of our citizens who wish to assist are up the lakes.

DOG POISONED.

Mr. W. H. Casement, while attending the holiday committee meeting, was followed by one of his hounds, a valuable dog, being one of the best in the place; by some means it got a dose of poison, (supposed to be set out for rats or mice), and died a short time after, to the regret of the many who have listened to his music in the woods last fall, and who were anticipating many a run with him next November.

We understand the work at Burleigh is at once to be proceeded with. The steamer Cruiser took up a scow load of iron and supplies on Thursday and more is ready to follow, while a large force of men will be at work in a few days.

A solid man of Syracuse, probably the richest man in the city, married the guardian angel who had presided over the kitchen of his widowhood. Not long after her sudden promotion a talented sculptor was in Syracuse, and his services were in demand at the —— mansion. The new made lady wanted her form preserved in marble under her own supervision. When the sculpter had completed his work, Syracuse was on a grin. At the subject's direction he had carved a bust of a woman with high back-comb and long earrings, all in marble and all gilded.

A well known clergyman in the North of England entertained recently a brother clergyman from some distance. The evening being unpropitious he asked him to remain for the night. At dusk the clergyman asked his guest to step into the manse while he gave orders to have his conveyance ready in the morning. As the visitor entered the manse the clergyman's wife mistook him in the dusk for her husband, and seizing the pulpit bible which was on the lobby table, brought the full weight of it across his shoulders, exclaiming emphatically, "Take that for asking the ugly wretch to stay all night."

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

Remarks on King David's Feigned Madness.

The Insanity of those Who Depend on this World's Enjoyments Alone for Happiness.

Text, I. Samuel xxi. 13: "And he changed his behavior before them and feigned himself mad in their hands and scrabbled upon the doors of the gate and let his spittle fall down upon his beard."

There is one scene in the life of David that you may not have pondered. You have seen him with a harp playing the devil out of Saul; with a sling smashing the skull of Goliath; with a sword hacking to pieces the Philistines; with a sceptre ruling a vast realm; with a psalm gathering all nations into doxology; but in my text you have David playing the fool. He has been annointed king, yet he is in exile and passing incognito among the Gathites. They begin to suspect who he is, and say, "I wonder if this is not the warrior King, David? It looks like him. Is not this the man about whom they used to make poetry and about whom they composed a dance, so that the maidens of the land, reeling now on one foot, and now on the other, used to sing, 'Saul has slain his thousands, but David has slain his tens of thousands.' Yes, it is very much like David. It must be David, it is David." David, to escape their hands, pretends to be demented. He said within himself, "If I act crazily, then, of course, these people will not injure me. No one would be so much of a coward as to assault a madman." So one day while these Gentiles are watching David with increased suspicion, they see him standing by the door running his hands meaninglessly up and down the panels and scrabbling on the door as though he would climb up, his mouth wide open, drooling like an infant. I suppose the boys of the streets threw missiles at him, but the sober people of the town said: "This is not fair. Do you not see that he has lost his reason? Do not touch this madman. Hands off! Hands off!" So David escaped; but what an exhibition he made of himself before all eyes. There was a majesty in King Lear's madness after Regan and Goneril, his daughters, had persuaded him to banish their sister Cordelia, and all the friends of the drama have been thrilled with that spectacular. The craziness of Meg Merrilies was weird and imposing, and the most thrilling passage in Walter Scott's "Guy Mannering." There was a fascination about the insanity of Alexander Cruden, who made the best concordance of the Bible that the world ever saw—made it between the mad-houses. Some time ago, while I was visiting the insane asylum on Blackwell's Island, a demented woman came up to me and said, in most tragic style:—

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

But there was nothing grand, nothing weird, nothing majestic, nothing sublime, about this simulation on the part of David, Instead of trusting in the Lord, as he had on other occasions, he gathers before him a vast audience of all generations that were to come, and, standing on that in the presence of all the ages, he impersonates the slavering idiot! "And he changed his behavior before them and feigned himself mad in their hands, and scrabbled at the door of the gate and let his spittle fall upon his beard."

CONSPICUOUS STAGE OF HISTORY,

Taking the behaviour of David as a suggestion I wish to tell you how many of the wise, and the brave and the regal sometimes play the fool. And in the first place I remark that those men as badly play the fool as this man of the text, who in any crisis of life take their case out of the hand of God. David in this case acted as though there were no God to lift him out of the predicament. What a contrast between his behaviour when this brave little man stood up in front of the giant, ten feet in height, and, looking into his face, said:—"Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of the armies of Israel whom thou hast defied; this day will the Lord deliver thee into my hand, and I will smite thee and take thine head from thee, and I will give the carcases of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air and to the wild beasts of the earth, that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel"—between that time and this time, when he debased himself, and bedraggled his manhood, and affected insanity in order that he might escape from the grip of the Gathites. In the one place he played the hero. In the other place he played the fool. So does every man who in the great crisis of life takes his case out of the hand of God. The life of the most insignificant man is too vast for any human management. Once while returning from the west I very easily got on the locomotive while passing over the plains, and talked with the engineer; but coming on toward the Alleghany Mountains, I thought I would like to sit on the locomotive as it came down from the mountains amidst that most wonderful scenery on this continent. I asked the engineer if I might ride, but he courteously denied me, for there the grade is so steep and so winding and so perilous that he must not have anyone on locomotive who may divert his attention when eye and hand and foot and brain must be concentrated and ready for the most sudden emergency. Well, my friends, life is so steep and so perilous and so exposed to sudden surprises that none but the Lord Almighty can guide and engineer it and our disasters come from the fact that we want to get up and help the Lord to manage the train. Keep off the engine! Be willing to let God pull you where he wants to pull you. You have no right for an instant to surrender your sanity and manhood as David surrendered his. Put your trust in God and he will take you through and over the mountains. I very much suspect that all the successful enterprises that were ever carried on and all the successful lives that have ever been lived, have been FULLY SURRENDERED TO GOD.

When the girl, Victoria, was awakened in the night and told that the throne of Great Britain was hers, she said to the prelate informing her: "I ask your prayers," and then and there they knelt down and prayed. Do you wonder that though since that time all the thrones of Europe have fallen or been fearfully shaken, hers stands as firm as the day she ascended it, and in every country under the sun, wherever an Englishman hears the name pronounced, he feels like waving his hat and crying: "God save the Queen!" That man, that woman, who puts their trust in God, will go through in triumph; while those who attempt to gather under their own supervision the intricate and elaborate affairs of their life are miserably playing the fool. Herbert, the great thinker, philosophized about himself, philosophized about this world, philosophized about everything, then in his dying moment asked that only one word might be cut upon his tombstone, and that word, "Infelicissimus"—most unhappy—descriptive of the state of the lives and of the deaths of those who take their case out of the hand of God. The only appropriate inscription for their banqueting hall and their equipage and their grave and the wall of their eternal prison-house—"Infelicissimus." In drooling, moral idiocy, they are scrabbling at the door of their happiness which never opens, miserably playing the fool. Again, I remark, all those persons play the fool, as certainly as did this man of the text, who allow the technicalities of religion to stop their salvation. David was wise about a great many things, but his cuttings up in the text for a little while eclipsed his character. And I know wise men and great men, competent for all other stations, who are acting a silly and foolish part in regard to the technicalities of religion. They ask us some questions which we cannot answer categorically, and so they burst into a loud guffaw, as though it is of any more interest to us than it ought to be to them. About the atonement, about God's decrees, about man's destiny, they ask a great many questions which we cannot answer, and so they deride us, as though we could not ask them a thousand questions that they cannot answer, about their eyes, about their ears, about their finger-nails, about everything. A fool can ask a question that a wise man cannot answer. Oh you cavilling men! Oh you profound men! Oh you learned men, do please admit something. You have a soul? Yes. Will it live forever? Yes. Where? You say that Jesus Christ is not a Divine Saviour. Who is he? Where will you go after you leave your law-books, and your medical prescriptions and your club-room and your newspaper office—where will you go to? Your body will be six feet under ground. Where will your soul be? The black coat will be off, the shroud on. These spectacles will be removed from your vision, for the sod will press your eyelids. Have you any idea that an earthly almanac describes the years of your lifetime! Of what stuff shall I gather the material for the letters of that word which describes your eternal home? Shall it be iron chains or

AMARANTHINE GARLAND.

The air that stirs the beweated locks of your dying pillow, will it come off a garden or a desert? Oh, quit the puzzling questions and try these momentous questions. Quit the small questions and try these great questions. Instead of discussing whether the serpent in Eden was figurative or literal, whether the Mediterranean fish did or did not swallow the recreant prophet, whether this and that and the other thing is right or wrong, come and discuss one question: "How shall I get rid of my sins and win heaven?" That is the question for you. Yes, there have been men who have actually lost their souls because they thought there was a discrepancy between Moses and Professor Silliman—because they could not understand how there could be light before the sun rose—the light appearing in verse three of Genesis and the sun not appearing until verse 16—and because they do not know how the moon could stand still without upsetting the universe, and because they had decided upon the theory of natural selection. A German philosopher in dying, had for his chief sorrow that he had not devoted his whole life to the study of the dative case. Oh, when your immortality is in peril, why quibble? Quit these non-essentials, my dear brother. In the name of God I ask you in regard to these matters of the immortal soul that you do not play the fool.

What is that man doing in Bowling Green, New York? Well, he is going in for a ticket for a transatlantic voyage. He is quarrelling with the clerk about the spots—the red spots on the ticket—and he is quarrelling about the peculiar signature of the president of the steamship company and he is quarrelling about the manner of the clerk who hands him the ticket. How long has he been standing there? Three weeks. Meanwhile, perhaps twenty steamers have gone out of port, and I hear the shriek of the steam tug that could take him to the last vessel that could bear him to his engagement in London. Still, he stands in Bowling Green discussing the ticket. What do you say in regard to that man? You say he is a fool. Well, in that very way are many men acting in regard to the matters of the soul. They are cavilling about the atonement, the red spots on the ticket, about the character of the minister who hands them the ticket, about whether it has a divine or human signature, and meanwhile all their opportunities for heaven are sailing out of the harbor, and I hear the last tap of the bell announcing their last chance for heaven. Go aboard! Do not waste any more time in higgling and carping and criticising and wondering, and in the presence of an astounded heaven playing the fool.

I go further and say to you that those men play the fool who undertake to pay out eternity for time. How little care do we bestow upon the railroad depot where we stop twenty minutes to dine. We dash in and we dash out again. We do not examine the architecture of the building nor the face of the caterer. We supply our hunger, we pay our money and we put on our hat and take our place in the train. What is that depot as compared with the place for which we are bound? Now, my friends, this world is only a stopping place on the way to a momentous destination, and yet how many of us sit down as though we had consummated our journey, as though we had come to the final depot, when our stopping here is as compared with our stopping there, as is 20 minutes to 12 hours—year, million years! Would Spain sell us Cuba for a bushel of wheat? Would England sell us India for a ton of coal? Would Venice sell us all her pictures for an American schoolboy's sketch? Ah, that would be a better bargain for England, Spain and Venice than that man makes who gives his eternity for time. Yet how many there are who are saying and you may have the eternal rewards, give me the world's applause and you may have the garlands of God, give me twenty, or forty, or sixty years of worldly successes, and I don't care what becomes of the future, I am going into that world uninsured! I take the responsibility! Don't bother me about your religion. Here I have the two worlds before me—this one and the next, I have chosen this. Go away from me, God, and angels, and thoughts of the future!" Men are actually making that choice, while there are others who have done far differently. When they tried to bribe with money Martin Luther some one said: "There's no use trying to do that—that Dutch beast cares nothing for gold." When they tried by giving him a cardinal's hat to bribe Savonarola, he stood up in his pulpit and cried out: "I will have no red hat save that of martyrdom, colored with my own blood." These men chose Christ amid great persecutions; but how many there are in this day, when Christianity seems to be popular, who are ashamed of Christ and not willing to take the hardships—the seeming hardships—of his religion. And, alas for them! for long after the crash of the world's demolition, they shall find that in all these years they were turning their backs upon the palaces of heaven, scrabbling on the door of this world's treasure house, the saliva of a terrible lunacy on their lips—horribly and overwhelmingly playing the fool.

Once more I say to you that those men play the fool who, while they admit the righteousness of religion, set it down for future attendance. Do you know how many times the word "now" occurs in the Bible? Over 200 times. One of the shortest words in the Bible, and yet one of the greatest in meaning and ramifications. When does the Bible say is the best time to repent? Now. When does the Bible say that God will forgive? Now. When does God say is the only safe time to attend to the matters of the soul? Now. But that word "now" melts away as easily as a snowflake in the evening rain. Where is the "now" of the dead of last year? the "now" of the dead of last month? the "now" of the dead of last week? the "now" of the dead of yesterday? Time has picked it up in its beak and flew away with it. Swammerdam and other naturalists tell us there are insects which within the space of one minute are born, fulfill their mission, celebrate their nuptials and die, but this wonderful now is more short-lived than they. It is a flash, a stroke, a glance. Its cradle is its grave. If men catch it at all it is with quick clutch. Millions of men have lost their soul immortal because they did not understand the momentum and the ponderosity of that one word. All the strategic powers of hell are exerted in trying to subtract from the energy and emphasis of that word. They say it is only a word of three letters, while there is a better word of eight letters—"to-morrow." They say: "Throw away that small word and take this other grand one;" and so men say: "Give us to-morrow," and take away from us "now," and between those two words is the Appian way of death, and a great multitude throng that way, jostling and elbowing each other, hastening on swifter and swifter to die. For how much would you walk the edge of the roof of your house? For how much would you come out on the most dangerous peak of the Matterhorn and wave your cap. You say: "No money could induce me to do it." And yet you stand with one foot on a crumbling moment, and the other foot lifted, not knowing where you will put it down, while the distance between you and the bottom of the depth beneath you.

NO PLUMMET CAN MEASURE,

no arithmetic calculate, no wing of lightning cleave. And yet the Bible tells us that unless a man has a new heart he cannot get into heaven, and many are not seeking for that new heart. In Mexico sometimes the ground suddenly opens, and a man standing near the gap can see down an appalling distance. But, oh, if now at your feet there should open the chasms of the lost world, how you would fling yourself back and cry:—"God save me—now! now! now!"

I greet you, my brother, in the very gate of eternity. Some of us may live a longer and some a shorter time; but at the longest life is so short that I feel we all stand on the doorsill of the great future. The next step—all the angels of God cannot undo the consequences. Will your exit from this life be a rising or falling? The righteous go up. The Saviour helps them. Ministering spirits meet them. The doors of paradise open to receive them. Up! up up! Oh, what a grand thing it is to die with a strong faith in God, like that which Stonewall Jackson had when in his expiring moments he said: "Let us cross over the river and lie down in the shade." But to leave this world unprepared is falling—falling from God, falling from hope, falling from peace, falling from heaven—swiftly falling, wildly falling, forever falling. So it was with one who had been eminent for his intelligence, but who had omitted all preparation for the future world and had come down to his last hour. He said to his wife seated by his bedside:—"Oh, don't talk to me about pain; it is the mind, woman; it is the mind. Of all the years of my life I never lived one minute for heaven. It is awfully dark here," he whispered, "it is awfully dark. I seem to stand on the slippery edge of a great gulf. I shall fall. I am falling!" And with a shriek as when a man tumbles over a precipice he expired. Wise for this world, about all the matters of his immortal soul he was his life long playing the fool.

I will take a particular case and ask what you think about that case. He has been all his life amid Bibles and churches so that he knows his duty. Christ has offered to do all for that man that a divine saviour can offer to do.

FOR A DYING SOUL.

Heaven has been offered him, yea, been pushed under him and yet he has not accepted it, and now he is deliberately allowing his chances of life to go away from him. What do you say of that one? "Hallucinated" says one. "Monomaniacal" says another. "Playing the fool" says another. Oh, how many there are taking just that position! There is such a thing as pyromania, an insanity which disposes one to destroy buildings by fire; but who would have thought that there was a pyromania of the immortal nature and that anyone could be so struck through with that insanity as to have a desire and disposition to consume the soul?

Awake, man! Awake woman! from the phantasia, real or affected. Take Christ. Escape for eternity. Just see what has been done for you. Lift the thorny cap from the brow of Jesus and see the price that was paid for your liberation. Look at the side where the spear went in and moved round and round, amid broken arteries, the blood rushing forth in awful sacrifice for our sins. Oh, wrap those bare and mutilated feet of the dying Lord in your lap, for they were torn in a hard tramp for your soul. Oh, for tears to weep over this laceration of Christ. Oh, for a broken heart to worship Him. Oh, for an omnipotent impulse strong enough to throw us all down at the feet of a crucified and risen Jesus. We must repent. We must believe. We must be saved. I cannot consent to lose my own soul; I cannot consent to have others lose their souls. Come with me and as in this summer time we go down to the beach and bathe in the waters, so now let us join hands and wade down into the summery sea of God's forgiveness. Roll over us tides of everlasting love! Roll over us! Dear Lord, we knock now at the door of mercy, not as the demented knock, not knowing what they want, but knocking at the door of mercy because we want to come in while others run their meaningless hands up and down the panels and scrabble at the gate in the presence of God and men and angels and devils, playing the fool.

BUTTER SALT!

Although Cheese now occupies the prominent place as a dairy product of our country, Butter still is of sufficient importance to receive attention.

For years Butter Merchants have been urging Dairymen to use good Salt, and little of it, but have met with limited success.

This season, to make this matter more practical, I offer a sample of Dairy Salt which I recommend to all my butter customers. The quality and price are both right. It is quality of Butter more than profit on salt I am after, so I hope to make liberal sales.

Prob'e Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Light to moderate, variable winds, mostly fair, very warm weather, with local showers or thunder storms.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.

Lacrosse Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, which was to have been held last night, was postponed until Monday evening, on account of the date of the Civic Holiday being changed to the 10th of August. A large attendance is requested, as business of an important nature will be dealt with.

The Market.

There was a good attendance on the square this morning and prices for produce were booming. Butter sold for 17 cents per pound, eggs for 12 cents per dozen, chickens 55 cents per pair, peas 20 cents per peck, potatoes for the same figure, raspberries, 75 to 90 cents per pail, cherries 10 cents per quart, apples 40 cents per peck, black currants 12 cents per quart. Oats were scarce at 36 cents per bushel, and hay could not be purchased less than $12 per ton.

Lawn Tennis Garden Party.

As our reporter was passing the beautiful grounds of Mrs. Gilmour's residence, Park street, last evening, he noticed a large gathering, evidently enjoying themselves in the midst of their delightful surroundings. He learned that the party was being given under the management of the Peterborough Lawn Tennis Club, and that in spite of the rain in the earlier part of the evening, an exceedingly pleasant couple of hours was spent.

Willow and Wicket.

The Cricket match which takes place on Monday next promises to be an excellent contest. The Montreal team contains some fine wielders of the willow, and the following dozen of names from which the home team will be chosen, will be sufficient to guarantee a good exhibition: — Messrs. Craven, Carter, Grundy, Hamilton Max., Hamilton Miles, Hammond, Logan, Norley, Rogers, Ray, Rutherford and Strathy. Wickets will be pitched at 10 o'clock sharp. Admission 15 cents.

Educational Estimates.

The Peterborough School Board will this year require $10,675 to carry on the work of education. Of this sum, $6,975 is required for Public Schools, and $3,700 for the Collegiate Institute. For the year 1875-6—ten years ago—for the same purposes the estimates were $5,575 for Public Schools and for High School, $5,360—a total of $10,935, an amount $260 in excess of the estimates of the current year, although this year provision has been made for a deficit of $365 from last year. So that it would appear that the amount required for school purposes this year is actually $625 less than it was ten years ago, notwithstanding that the schools have increased largely in attendance, efficiency etc.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

P. A. A. A. Sports.

The Newcastle Bicyclists Sweep the Field.

Notwithstanding the rainy weather last evening, a fair crowd was on the Athletic grounds to witness the sports held in connection with the Association. The track was in excellent condition, thanks to the painstaking custodian, Mr. James Norley, and each event was a keen contest from the word "go." Mr. R. B. Rogers acted as starter and Messrs. Dr. Burnham and R. J. Salisbury stood at the winning post and declared the winners of the events. The following is the list of the several races with the winners of each race:—

One hundred yard race, (3 entries), First, G. F. Orde; second, C. A. Lawford. Orde led from the start and was about three feet in advance of Lawford when he breasted the tape.—Time, 11 seconds.

Mile Bicycle Race, (2 entries).—Kent, of Newcastle, and Gibson, of Peterborough. This was a match race for a gold medal, and excited a great deal of interest. Gibson obtained a slight advantage at the start, but before he had gone one hundred yards, the Newcastle boy forged ahead of him, and held the advantage throughout the contest, winning by about 9 feet.—Time 3 minutes, and 3 seconds.

Quarter Mile Race.—There being only one entry, Hamilton, of Bobcaygeon, he was allowed to go over the course, which he did in 55 seconds, and was credited with a heat.

Mile Bicycle Race, (5 entries).—On account of the track being too narrow to permit all of the contestants to start, this event was contested for in three heats. In the first Ames, McClelland and Brillinger started. McClelland led and was closely followed by Ames; Brillinger being left a considerable distance in the rear. In the fourth lap the two former wheelmen were in very close quarters for a short distance, when Ames crept up on his opponent and passed him. Charley stuck very pluckily to his work, however, and in trying to regain his lost position, came in contact with the "back bone" of the other's bike, and both went to the cinders, which act in the drama, gave the heat to Brillinger. The other two entries, Miller and Bowie, of Newcastle, then rode over the course and the former won in 4 minutes and 45 seconds.

MILE RACE—two entries—Hamilton (Bobcaygeon) and Lawford. The two took their ease for the five laps, when the visitor passed his opponent and won. Time, 5 mins., 37 seconds.

The final heat of the mile bicycle race was then announced, and the two Newcastle boys and Ames and Brillinger started. This was the most exciting contest of the series, and was won by Miller. Time, 3 mins., 55 secs.

It was 8.30 p.m. when the sports were concluded, and the spectators left the grounds thoroughly satisfied with the evening's programme.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

Mr. Wm. H. Newett, General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Manchester, England, and representative of the society for the emigration of young men to Canada, will be in town in about a week and will address a meeting at the young men's hall.

Fun and Frolic for the Railroaders.

The employees of the Midland Division of the Grand Trunk Railway, hold their annual picnic at Hutton's grove, near Lindsay, today. A large number of citizens left Peterborough this morning to take part in the day's recreation.

Baptist Church.

In the Baptist Church, on Sunday, Rev. Mr. Munro will, in the morning, preach a special sermon to children and in the evening the subject of his discourse will be "Paul." Rev. Mr. Munro leaves on Monday for a six weeks visit to Massachusetts. During his absence his pulpit will be supplied by different Ministers.

In Great Demand.

The "Ratoche Polka," Miss Annie Deaney's first musical composition, has become quite popular and is in great demand. Recent Peterborough visitors to Ottawa noticed it displayed in the windows of every music store in that city, and we are informed that it was much sought after and appreciated.

Police Court.

Yesterday afternoon at the Police Court M. Lycett was charged with being drunk and was sent up for 10 days. This morning James Van Orman and George Byrne were presented as two subjects for the Magistrate's attention, by Constables Johnston and McGinty, respectively, and after receiving a sound warning from the Court were allowed to go.

Oddfellows' Excursion.

The Oddfellows of the town have arranged for an excursion to Lindsay on Tuesday, 28th instant, when the Lindsay Lodge hold their decoration ceremonies. It is expected that quite a representation of the order from here will attend, and others who may wish to do so are cordially invited. Return tickets, good for two days, may be procured at the station on day of excursion, at one dollar.

The Great Niagara Falls Excursion.

Don't forget the Firemen's grand excursion to Niagara Falls on Monday, August 10th, Peterborough's Civic Holiday. Train leaves town at 6 a.m. sharp, connecting at 9 o'clock with the steamer Chicora at Toronto for Niagara Falls. Excursionists will leave on return at 5 o'clock, reach Toronto at 7, and home at an early hour. Tickets good for three days. Return tickets to the Falls, $2.50; to Toronto, $2.00. Children half price.

Fun at the Lansdowne.

Shevlin too Smart for Sweetser.

When the gong sounded last evening at nine o'clock for the clearance of the floor at the Lansdowne Rink, and Shevlin and Sweetser made their appearance, over one thousand spectators greeted them with applause. The two were matched to skate a two-mile race for a silver cup, and when they started and the foreigner shot to the front the excitement which the spectators evinced was noticable in many ways. One young man pulled out his handkerchief, wiped the perspiration off his forehead, and on seeing Shevlin, his favourite, pass his man on the second round, put it back in the pocket of the person who sat next to him, instead of his own. From this point "Jack" added to his lead in every round and won the race by about half a lap in 7 mins. and 55 secs. A mile race then took place, in which four boys started: McFarlane, S. Rubidge, Coarsey and P. Rubidge. S. Rubidge jumped to the fore at the sound of the bell, closely followed by Pat Coarsey, who bothered the leader in such a manner that he fell in the twelfth lap, and Pat, assisted by a mouthful of gum, was declared winner by Messrs. Joe Daly and R. H. Fortye, the judges in both events. A number of bicylists then took the floor and gave a very nice exhibition of riding in a grand march, which embraced figures much of the same character as those gone through at the rink on previous occasions, on rollers.

Lines

Dedicated to Andy McNeil, the manager of the Forester's excursion to Ottawa, July 21st, 1885.

"Tickets ready," Andy cries,
Doors banged to—"mind your eyes!"
"Morning papers, will you buy?"
Stand back! whistle blows,
"Good byes," kisses, nods and bows,
A scream, a snort, and off she goes,
Slowly at first, then faster,
Faster, faster and faster!
Hedges, trees, cattle and men,
Houses, fields, moor and fen,
Are passed like a flash of light,
Are there, here, and out of sight,
Pushing, blowing and gasping,
Rattling, reeling and rasping,
Snorting, smoking and stammering,
Hurrying and hammering,
Hissing, rushing and puffing,
Toiling, coiling and gushing,
Pulling, panting, skurrying,
To the "Sink Hole" hurrying,
The passengers flurrying,
Stumbling, reeling and dashing,
Thro' village stations crashing,
Roaring, screaming and quaking,
Steaming, belching and shaking,
Thro' stony cuttings rumbling,
Tumbling and jumbling,
Thro' villages and towns,
Over hills and over downs,
Until at last the race is run,
And unto Ottawa we have come.

Peterborough Business College.

Its "Business" Opening Monday Morning —A Description of the Rooms—The Teaching Staff—Subjects Taught.

On Monday morning the Peterborough Business College, of which Mr. D. Bannell Sawyer is President, threw open its rooms to the coming business man. A good number of students reported for study, but it will be a day or two before all the classes of the opening session are in readiness for work.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ROOMS.

We have before mentioned that the new Business College, to be established in Peterborough, was to find a "local habitation" in the Cluxton Block, Hunter street. The whole third story of the premises formerly occupied by the Darcy House Hotel has been remodeled for the new use to which the new premises will be put. This site is excellently adapted to the intented purpose. The access to the third floor is by two easy flights of stairs, and the location, while being in the midst of the business portion of the town, is so far above the bustle and noise of the street as to give no chance of students being disturbed thereby.

THE LECTURE ROOM.

At the end of a wide hall, double glass doors, appropriately lettered, admit to the lecture room of the institution, a large, airy, well-lighted apartment, 25x48 feet in size. This is excellently fitted up for the accommodation of eighty students. The walls have been neatly papered, and a characteristic feature of the ornamentation is that around the walls are the names, printed on Bristol board, of two of the most successful business men, in each of the leading towns and cities, those for Peterborough being Messrs. James Stevenson and Geo. A. Cox. The names are displayed as types of the business energy and ability that chiefly contribute to success, and are intended to act as incentives to the student. In this room are taught the theory and practice of book-keeping, banking and general business and office work. Each student is provided with a small table, and a chair of a peculiar construction, devised by Mr. Sawyer himself. It is easy to sit in, with arms, of which the right is broadened into a sort of supplementary desk on which the student may rest his book or slate during study hours. The southern portion of this room is furnished with counters and is devoted to practical instruction in the science and art of banking and general office work. Mr. Sawyer evidently believes in a sound mind in a sound body, for he has selected a large airy room in which the sanitary conditions necessary to health are provided. The students occupying this lecture room will have always the number of cubic feet of air space prescribed by law for school rooms. Adjoining this apartment is the class room where recitations are heard. This room is not large, yet sufficiently so; for the classes composed of all those in attendance, are so carefully graded that the individual members of a class generally bear a small proportion to the aggregate attendance. Adjacent to this is the room where telegraphy and type writing are taught. The instruction in telegraphy is perfectly practical, regular instruments, batteries, etc., etc., being provided. Pupils are taught all that can be taught in the regular work, and arrangements are being made to connect the instruments of this room with the main line of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company. To be in harmony with its use, the paper of this room resembles in pattern, the zig-zag play of electricity, when it exhibits itself in the form of lightning.

Directly communicating with the banking and office work department of the Lecture room, is the office of the principal, Mr. Sawyer, which is chiefly devoted to the teaching of the pen art or penmanship, and its walls are hung with portraits of the leading penmen of Canada.

At present the rooms will only be used for day sessions, the night sessions, which will be an exact counterpart in course of instruction and study with the day sessions, not beginning till October 1st. Arrangements are being made for the introduction of the electric light by that date, or earlier. Thus the Peterborough Business College will be the only institution of its kind in Canada lighted by electric light.

The premises are well equipped and ready for the work of training the future business men and women of the country.

TEACHING STAFF.

The teaching staff consists of Prof. J. Bannel Sawyer, Principal, Superintendent and Examiner in all the subjects taught, of which he has a practical knowledge and experience in teaching; Mr. D. W. Dumble, lecturer on and examiner in commercial law; Mrs. Bannel Sawyer, teacher of mental arithmetic, ladies penmanship, practical grammar, type-writing, etc., and W. H. Dayman, superintendent of the telegraphic department.

THE SUBJECTS TAUGHT.

The following shows what a wide range of subjects is selected for instruction:—

SECTION "A."—School of Finance.—Subjects.—Book-keeping, business forms, correspondence, spelling, practical grammar, commercial law, penmanship, commercial and mental arithmetic, detection of counterfeit money, banking and bank book-keeping, business practice, package marking, foreign exchange, advertising.

SECTION "B."—School of Shorthand and Typewriting.—Subjects.—Penmanship, brief writing, correspondence, practical grammar, shorthand, typewriting, paragraphing, also amanuensis and reporting practice.

SECTION "C."—School of Telegraphy.—Subjects.—Construction and management of lines, circuits, switches, etc., telegraphic book-keeping, making out reports, receiving and despatching. The best instruments used.

SECTION "D."—School of Pen Art.—Subjects.—Plain and flourished penmanship, Italian capitals, French back-hand, English round-hand, German Text, Old English and church texts, Roman, block ribbon, rustic, figure, and ornamental and elaborated capitals; off-hand flourishing, fine pen drawing, line and stipple shading, cross hatching, card writing, designing; besides work on addresses, testimonials, resolutions and memorials; display and graduating specimens.

The Lecture Course includes: Political economy, business ethics, business morality, shop etiquette, real life, character, panics, saving and making, manhood, accommodation.

From the above it will be seen that a very comprehensive curriculum of studies is presented and that the Peterboraugh Business College is devoted to fitting young men and young women for actual business of all kinds and descriptions. It is itself a little world, with all the varieties of business done in the world. The business of the merchant, the manufacturer, the banker, the importer and jobber, the expressman and the insurance company, the real estate agent and the broker, including telegraphy, shorthand, penmanship, type-writing, and the whole order of activities, are taught by a carefully and ingeniously devised system of object lessons.

The College is now a settled and established institution in our midst, and the indications are that it has a flourishing career of usefulness before it. We cordially welcome it to town, and as cordially wish it success. We shall have pleasure hereafter in noting in detail several matters which our space at present only admits of mentioning casually.

Willow and Wicket.

In the match between the Montreal cricketers and the Peterboroughs, the home team went to the bat first and scored 51. The visitors followed and ran up 74 runs. In their second go the home team had three men out for 19 runs, as we go to press.

A Hint to the Boys.

I stood in the store the other day when a boy came in and applied for a situation.

"Can you write a good hand?" was asked.

"Yaas."

"Good at figures?"

"Yaas."

"That will do—I don't want you," said the merchant.

"But," I said, when the boy had gone, "I know that lad to be an honest, industrious boy. Why don't you give him a chance?"

"Because he hasn't learned to say "Yes sir." and "No, sir." If he answers me as he did when applying for a situation how will he answer customers after being here a month?"

What could I say to that? He had fallen into a habit, young as he was, which turned him away from the first situation he had ever applied for.—New London Day.

Pigeons' Love.

A writer in the Scottish Naturalist tells a story of a pigeon which illustrates the truth of the saying that God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, and the high power of instinct prompted by paternal love. Two pigeons had built their nest in the top storey of a dove-cote, and had hatched their young, which came out of the egg about the middle of March, 1876. On the 16th of March a very severe storm and snowdrift set in at dusk. It must be noticed that the door of the dove-cote looked to the northwest from whence the storm was coming, so that the snow blew right into the portal where the young pigeons were lying, only a few days old. The storm was very severe, so much so that it was thought to be the hardest that had happened for many years, and the young brood would have no doubt perished but for the happy expedient that the father of the young pigeons adopted. He stood in the doorway with his tail spread out to the storm, and the wings in a fluttering position, evidently with the intention of stopping the draft, so as to shelter his naked offspring. And there he stood for hours, with the snow thick upon his back and tail, breaking the intensity of the cold. But for this the young must have died.

The Oxford crew started from Dover at 10:15 on Saturday morning to row across the Channel. They reached Calais at 2:42 p.m.

Home from Egypt.

Capt. Kennedy the Last of the Canadian Contingent to Arrive Home—On his Way to Winnipeg—The Last Hours of Col. W. N. Kennedy—"A Remarkable Man"—Flowers from his Grave.

On Sunday morning Capt. J. C. Kennedy, formerly of Peterborough, and brother of the late Col. W. N. Kennedy, arrived in town and received a most cordial welcome from the hosts of friends who knew him previous to his leaving town eight years ago. He was with the Canadian contingent in Egypt, and was first in command under Col. Kennedy.

He was seen at the Canadian Pacific Hotel this morning, and related several interesting incidents concerning the closing days of the life of Col. Kennedy.

On board ship, returning from Egypt, Col. Kennedy complained of feeling unwell but it was thought that it was due to sea-sickness and the fatigues incident to the terrible recent experiences through which he had passed, but on his arrival in London, that dreadful disease small-pox, contracted, it is supposed, at Dongola, developed itself and he was at once removed to Highgate Small-pox Hospital. Captain James Kennedy was also ill and had to be removed to the Grenadier Guards Hospital, Rochester Row, Westminster.

The last time he saw his brother was on Thursday preceeding his death on Sunday, before it was known what his illness was. The next day Capt. Kennedy was taken to the hospital where he was seriously ill with enteric fever and pluresy.

Col. Kennedy's attack of small-pox was of the most virulent character, and it was, from the first, seen that he could not survive.

"A MOST REMARKABLE MAN."

Dr. Goad, who attended Col. Kennedy, informed the medical men who attended his brother, Capt. James, that Col. Kennedy was a "most remarkable man." When admitted to the hospital the colonel was, of course, anxious to be made aware of his condition and he asked Dr. Goad:—

"Am I very sick, Doctor?"

"Yes, indeed, you are."

"Am I likely to recover?"

Dr. Goad did not like to answer so momentous a question, fearing its effect upon his patient, and after reluctantly answering, "I think not," was surprised to hear the calm and resigned answer:—

"Very well, doctor; in that case I have some business matters to arrange."

This reply was given with the unconcern of a man for whom death had no terrors—who had so lived as to be ready for death when it came, whose eternal future had been looked forward to and provided for.

The dying man then set to work and in the clearest and most methodical manner arranged his earthly matters. He dictated two letters, or rather documents—one respecting the members and affairs of the contingent, and the other relating to business and family matters. The former indicates a tender thoughtfulness for his men which explains the secret of Col. Kennedy's popularity with them. It shows an interest and thoughtfulness that would be remarkable in a man in possession of his full health; but, in a man with the certain prospect of a loathsome and terrible death before him, it is simply marvellous.

The interest of everybody who had been under him was looked after and minute directions given for seeing that several names specified got their dues of pay, etc. Even the disposition of trifling trinkets, that had been confided to his care by some of the men was minutely directed.

THE LAST LETTER TO THE FAMILY is extremely touching. The dying hero remembered all his numerous relatives with loving admonitions to meet him in heaven, where he hoped to join those who had preceded him. Col. Kennedy retained his consciousness to the last and died worthy of adapting to himself the words of St. Paul: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, and henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of glory."

Col. Kennedy's body was laid with military honors in Highgate cemetery, and about a month after his death, Capt. Kennedy on release from hospital, visited the grave. He found thereon a magnificent wreath of flowers, withered and faded by a month's rain and weather. He brought home with him a portion of the wreath and the little card placed thereon, which read as follows:

"From His Royal Highness, the Duke of Cambridge, May 6th 1885."

The grave, is as yet unmarked by any stone, but it is probable that a family monument will, before long be erected. But this will not be all, for it is not unlikely that a movement will be set on foot to give a national recognition of the services of a great and good man. The British Government is noted for its generosity to the relatives of great commanders who die in her service, and it is not probable that the case of Colonel Kennedy will be an exception.

Captain James C. Kennedy, after passing five weeks in the hospital, spent a few days in London, sailed on the Parisian, arriving "home," that is to Canada, on the 26th of June. He has since that time been in Ottawa attending to business in the interest of Colonel Kennedy's estate, and the affairs of the Canadian contingent. He spent Sunday and to-day in renewing old acquaintances in town and he found himself kept exceedingly busy. He was naturally anxious to reach Winnipeg, but he met such a warm welcome in his old home that he was persuaded to remain over a day or two. Capt. Kennedy leaves for Winnipeg to-morrow morning.

The Coming British Elections

BRITISH CONSERVATISM.

LONDON, July 26.—The Conservatives have decided to contest every constituency in Great Britain where there is a shadow of chance for success. Tory candidates will, therefore, stand for every constituency in England and Scotland, except in about 40, where the Liberals have such an assured ascendancy that it would be a waste of energy to try to beat them. An enormous fund for defraying election expenses has already been accumulated by the Conservatives.

Satisfied at Last.

Russia Says She Has Occupied all the Territory She Wants.

LONDON, July 26.—An article in the Moscow Gazette, reported to be inspired, declares that Russia, in occupying the Zulfikar pass, has reached the furthest limits to which she desires to go, and that the government considers its ventures in Central Asia at an end. Russia, the Gazette says, fears nothing so much as the condition and growth of an unwieldly territory. The czar is anxious to secure a solid frontier within which progressive works of civilization may be carried on.

A Russian commercial commission has been appointed with Major Bajen, chief of the Caucasus cadets, in command. The object of the commission is the study of trade movements and means of communication between the Trans-Caspian territory and Afghanstan and Persia.

Port Hope.

A meeting of the Reformers of East Durham called by circular and posters was held Saturday in the Town Hall, Port Hope, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to contest the constituency at the coming election. The chair was taken by the President, H. H. Burnham, Esq., at 11 o'clock; Geo. Wilson, Secretary, was at his place. There were some 200 persons present, but on account of the short notice, the attendance from the north part of the riding was not as large as was desirable, it was therefore resolved to adjourn the convention until 2 o'clock, Wednesday next, 29th inst, to meet in the Town Hall, Millbrook.

Aunt Venus' Cat.

As I passed Aunt Venus' abode I discovered, from the clatter of pans and kettles going on within, that she, too was up and stirring. As I paused to peer curiously within the open door, in a twinkling from out it flew a large cat, with tall erect, wild eyes, and in its mouth a chicken dressed and made ready for the frying-pan, which latter came flying after her, hurled by an exasperated hand, while a cracked, high-keyed voice exclaimed:

ENGLAND'S RESPONSIBILITIES.

In studying the wonderful growth and increase of the British possessions throughout the world, the question often propounds itself, what good object or purpose can be served thereby? How is it that immense districts in all parts of the world are coming under the control and supervision of that glorious flag, which for a thousand years has braved the battle and the breeze? To the thoughtful mind there can be no more interesting study than this.

Now, empire is evidently given to nations in order to carry on God's work, to spread the blessings of civilisation and Christianity throughout the world and to elevate the social, moral and religious condition of earth's inhabitants. The nation which, from infirmity of purpose, sheer indifference or servile decay, fails to discharge its solemn responsibilities in these matters, will speedily lose prestige and position and find weakness and disintegration in every part of the land where it formerly held sway.

We have been led into this train of thought by a recollection of the work which has apparently been given to England for accomplishment in the dark continent—Africa. For some good object surely it has come to pass that, without any special effort on her part, the benighted nations of that country are submitting themselves to England's rule or are seeking the benefit of her protection and authority.

Three great names are closely interwoven with the history of that deeply interesting, yet benighted land. In Central Africa, Mackenzie laboured heroically and with some measure of success for the suppression of the accursed slave trade. Under the prestige of England's name, Livingstone, with a self sacrifice, disinterestedness and devotion worthy of the Apostolic age, prepared the way, amid the most depraved and downtrodden races of the earth, for the mighty victories of the Cross. Stanley followed in his wake, and though a man of totally different mental and moral calibre, was able to effect some good, by directing the wealth and Christian charity of England's church to consider the deep destitution and darkness of Central Africa, and to attempt to evangelize the valley of the Congo.

Just about the same time England was reluctantly forced to interfere in Egypt, and so two great highways of access were opened in Africa, that the blessings of Christianity and civilization might flow out to its unhappy races, so despised and degraded through the greed and lust of sinful white men.

Many an earnest heart hoped that by such channels and through the use of right means Christian England would establish herself permanently on the dark continent. But these bright dreams were quickly shattered. England's champion, the lion-hearted Gordon, was sacrificed to delay and infirmity of counsel, the Christians of Khartoum are left to their sad fate, friendly tribes are forsaken and England's honor dragged low in the mire and dust.

We need hardly wonder if, under such unhappy circumstances, the slave trade of Central Africa receives fresh impetus and many a dark-skinned inhabitant is sacrificed to greed of gain. Already, indeed, news have been received from the Congo telling of the revolt of Arab slave hunters against the attempted civilization.

And it is currently reported that the rulers of Egypt, who came in denouncing the Turk, are about to hand over the responsibilities of England as a Christian nation and its wonderful opportunities for good, to the tender mercies of the Mussulman.

We must not judge our rulers too harshly or severely. But does it not seem as if the nation, ignorant of its high responsibilities, or neglectful thereof, is losing in some degree its former prestige? Such humiliation among the countries of the earth will surely awaken England to consider the high purpose Providence had in view in entrusting her with almost universal sway, and may tend, more than aught else, to stir her up to a sense of duty, and make her fully alive to her vast responsibilities.

Benafort.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The day being favorable on the 12th quite a number of Orangemen attended service at Centreville, occupying the central part of the church.

The hay which was a medium crop is harvested in very good condition generally.

Little Verey was at the old school room on Tuesday evening with his little panorama, and pleased the little folks wonderfully.

The decision of the counties regarding the bridge question does not seem to have surprised many, and for the present, as traffic by Wallace Point will likely increase, so also will the demand for good roads.

The season so far is very favourable to the growth of grain and plants, which have only been retarded slightly by a few cold nights in June.

Nearly all fruits grown here are making good appearance.

We note with pleasure, that the picnic held in Dawson's grove, by the residents of S. S. No. 3, on Dominion Day, was in many ways a success. The only part not as advertised was the popular game of lacrosse, to have been played between Benafort and Millbrook. Cause, non-appearance of the Millbrook boys. This, however, is not attributable to the close contest from our lads at Millbrook a few days previous, as, it is supposed, greater attractions for amusement were held out elsewhere. In the meantime, anxiety is daily increasing with us for another game.

To Duncan McNevan for cedars $2.08. Messrs. Campbell and McNeil were allowed to build a shed opposite their store, in Keene, on the road allowance, said shed to be placed not less than forty feet south of the northern limit of said road and shall be removed by them when notified by the Council of this township so to do. The Reeve and Mr. Grady were authorized to spend the sum of one hundred and sixty dollars on the Douro boundary road. Council adjourned until Monday, 21st September next.

Scripture Readings in Public Schools.

The following notice has been sent to the School Inspectors of the Province:—

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT, Toronto, July, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—I forwarded to you, a few weeks ago, a parcel containing a copy of the authorized Scripture Readings, for each School and Department in your Inspectoral Division. While conducting your usual visit next term, I trust you will be able, without much inconvenience, to distribute them among your teachers. Before doing so, however, I desire to call your attention to the Regulations respecting Religious Instruction recently issued.

By paragraph three, "Any teacher having conscientious scruples against opening and "closing his school as provided by the Re- "gulations is required to notify the Trustees "in writing to that effect." In carrying out the intention of this Regulation every precaution should be taken that the liberty which may be rightfully exercised as therein provided should not be used as a means of ostracising the teacher of any denomination or creed, nor should his conscientious scruples be a reason for official censure, much less for his dismissal by any Board of Trustees.

The right conceded to the pupil of absenting himself from the religious exercises of the school, as provided in paragraph four of the Regulations, requires the most careful attention of every teacher. In order that the parents and guardians of Roman Catholic pupils may be saved unnecessary trouble in giving notice to teachers under this Regulation, it is to be assumed that the parent or guardian of a Roman Catholic pupil has notified his wish to the teacher, as by this rule required, unless such parent expressly notifies such teacher in writing that he desires the pupil of which he is such parent or guardian to attend and be present at the religious exercises prescribed. Before entering upon the closing exercises of the school, the teacher should therefore allow a short interval to elapse, during which such pupils might retire, and in this way remove all doubts as to the faithful observance of the Regulations.

While the Education Department is most anxious to promote the moral welfare of the pupils attending the Public and High Schools of the Province, it is equally anxious that the rights guaranteed to all by the Public Schools Act should not be interfered with. You will, I trust, in the discharge of your public duties, endeavour to impress these views upon every teacher and trustee within your jurisdiction. I have the honor to be

Your obedient servant,
GEO. W. ROSS,
Minister of Education.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w-1y

Editorial Note.

An editor having been sick for a long time, perceived that his latter end was approaching. His spiritual adviser comforted him by saying that he, the editor, would soon enter into his eternal rest, where there would be no more worry or trouble.

"Are printers allowed in Heaven too?" feebly asked the dying man.

"Certainly, if they have been good.

"Then," responded the editor, feebly, "I have no hope. My foreman died last year, and as he was a good man he must be in Heaven. I know I won't be in Heaven more than five minutes before I'll hear him say, 'More copy!' I don't see how I can make anything by dying." And pulling on his boots and clothes the editor went down to the office and ground out a column editorial on "The Conflict between Religion and Science," and about four columns of miscellaneous brevities, having previously refreshed himself with a cocktail.—Texas Siftings.

Ruined His Business.

"I never see an electric light but I get mad," remarked a passenger on a Chicago & Alton train the other day.

"How is that?"

"Well, there's cause enough for it. I own a nice picnic and camp ground near St. Louis, that I rent out for evening parties and religious camp-meetings. I've made a good deal of money off it in the last three years, and was doing well this season till about two weeks ago. Then I made up my mind to light it with electricity. I spent $1,300 for the plant, and expected to get it all back by increased custom. It's been my ruin."

"Can't see how that comes."

"You can't?" Well, you could if you knew anything about the business. My grounds were made almost as light as day, and they were really beautiful. But a camp-meeting I had there last week broke up the second night for lack of attendance, and the fellows that had engagements for evening picnics heard of the electric lights and broke off the bargains. I'd like to kick every electric light I see."—Chicago Herald.

Teaching Him a Lesson.

"Fader, I forgit somedimes."

"You moost nicht dot somedimes fordot. You moost like your fader him done vhen him vas a boy."

"And what was that, fader?"

"I moost English sprechen all der dimes vhen I don'd vas so pig as a leedle tog yit. Und you see dot vas vhy I got me dot language to a fine pidd down."

"Fader, do you want me to learn you or you learn me?"

"Fur vhy you dose way dalk? You make me ashamed fon meinself fon you."

"I can speak English better than you can now, fader."

"Gott im Himmell! You consuld your fader dot vay! Ven I vas half not so pig like you I sprechen me dot English dalk so veller as a schule teacher. You got you doo schmard! But he didn't show Yacob how it was done. Yacob was too smart for that. He know four times more than his father. That's why he dodged out and off down the street at the fastest small boy rate.—Kentucky State Journal.

CALLED BACK

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter II —Continued.

Not until my dying day shall I forget that time when my cure was declared a fact; when the bandages were removed, and I was told I might now use, sparingly, my uncurtained eyes.

The joy, from what seemed never-ending night, to wake and see the sun, the stars—the clouds sped by the wind across the fair blue sky! To see green branches swaying with the breeze, and throwing trembling shadows on my path! To mark the flower; a bud but yesterday—to-day a bloom! To watch the broad bright sea grow splendid with the crimson of the west! To gaze on pictures, people, mountains, streams—to know shape, color, form and tint! To see, not hear alone, the moving lips and laugh of those who grasped my hand and spoke kind words!

To me, in those first days of new-born light, the face of every woman, man and child seemed welcome as the face of some dear friend, long lost and found again!

After this description of my ecstasy it seems pure pathos to say that the only thing which detracted from it was my being obliged to wear those strong convex glasses. I was young and they were horribly disfiguring.

"Shall I never be able to do without them?" I asked, rather ruefully.

"That," replied Mr. Jay, "is a point upon which I wish to speak to you. You will never be able to do without glasses. Remember, I have destroyed, absorbed, dissolved the glasses in your eyes called crystalline lenses. Their place is now supplied by the fluid humor. This has a high refracting power. Very often if you don't give in to Nature she will give in to you. If you can take the trouble to coerce her, she will gradually meet you. If any one should do this, it is you. You are young; you have no profession, and your bread does not depend upon your sight. Glasses you must always wear, but if you insist that Nature shall act without such strong aids as these, the chances are she will at last consent to do so. It is a tedious process; few have been able or have had patience to persevere; but my experience is that in many instances it may be done."

I determined it should be done. I followed his advice. At great personal inconvenience I wore glasses which only permitted me to say I could see at all. But my reward came. Slowly, very slowly, I found my sight growing stronger, till, in about two years' time, I could, by the aid of glasses, the convexity of which was so slight as to be scarcely noticeable, see as well as most of my fellow creatures. Then I began once more to enjoy life.

I cannot say that, during those two years spent in perfecting my cure, I thought no more about that terrible night; but I made no further attempt to unravel the mystery, or to persuade any one that I had not imagined those events. I buried the history of my adventure in my heart, and never again spoke of it. In case of need, I wrote down all the particulars, and then tried to banish all memory of what I had heard. I succeeded fairly well except for one thing. I could not for any long period keep my thoughts from the remembrance of that woman's moaning—that pitiable transition of the voice from sweet melody to hopeless despair. It was that cry which troubled my dreams, if ever I dreamed of that night—it was that cry which rang in my ears as I woke, trembling, but thankful to find that this time, at least, I was only dreaming.

CHAPTER III.

THE FAIREST SIGHT OF ALL.

It is spring—the beautiful spring of Northern Italy. My friend Kenyon and I are lounging about in the rectangular city of Turin, as happy and idle a pair of comrades as may anywhere be met with. We have been here a week, long enough to do all the sight-seeing demanded by duty. We have seen San Giovanni and the churches. We have toiled, or beasts of burden have toiled with us, up La Superga, where we have gazed at the mausoleum of Savoy's princely line. We have seen enough of the cumbrous old Palazzo Madama, which frowns at our hotel across the Piazzi Castello. We have marveled at the plain, uninteresting looking Palazzo Reale, and our mirth has been moved by the grotesque brickwork decoration of the Palazzo Carignano. We have criticised the rather poor picture gallery. In fact we have done Turin thoroughly, and, with the contempt bred by familiarity, are ceasing to feel like pitiful little atoms as we stand in the enormous squares and crane our necks looking at Marochetti's immense bronze statues.

Our tasks are over. We are simply loafing about and enjoying ourselves; reveling in the delicious weather, and trying to make up our languid but contented minds as to when we shall leave the town and where our next resting-place shall be.

We wander down the broad Viadi Po, lingering now and then to peer into the enticing shops which lurk in its shady arcades; we pass through the spacious Piazzi Vittorio Emanuele; we cross the bridge whose five granite arches span the classic Po; we turn opposite the domed church and soon are walking up the wide shaded path which leads to the Capuchin Monastery; the broad terrace in front of which is our favorite haunt. Here we can lounge and see the river at our feet, the great town stretching from its further bank, the open plain beyond the town, and, far, far away in the background, the glorious snow-capped Alps, with Monte Rosa and Grand-Paradis towering above their brothers. No wonder we enjoy the view from this terrace more than churches, palaces or pictures.

We gaze our fill, then retrace our steps and saunter back as lazily as we came. After lingering a few moments at our hotel some hazy destination prompts us to cross the great square, past the frowning old castle, leads us up the Via di Seminario, and we find ourselves for the twentieth time in front of San Giovanni. I stop with my head in the air admiring what architectural beauties its marble front can boast, and as I am trying to discover them am surprised to hear Kenyon announce his intention of entering the building.

"But we have vowed a vow," I said, "that the interior of churches, picture galleries, and other tourist traps shall know us no more."

"What makes the best men break their vows?"

"Lots of things, I suppose."

"But one thing in particular. While you are staring up at pinnacles and buttresses, and trying to look as if you knew architecture as well as Ruskin, the fairest of all sights, a beautiful woman, passes right under your nose."

"I understand—I absolve you."

"Thank you. She went into the church. I feel devotional, and will go too."

"But our cigars?"

"Chuck them to the beggars. Beware of miserly habits, Gilbert; they grew on one."

Knowing that Kenyon was not the man to abandon a choice Havana without a weighty reason, I did as he suggested and followed him into the dim cool shades of San Giovanni.

No service was going on. The usual little parties of sightseers were walking about and looking much impressed as beauties they could not comprehend were being pointed out to them. Dotted about here and there were silent worshipers. Kenyon glanced round eagerly in quest of "the fairest of all sights," and after a while discovered her.

"Come this way," he said; "let us sit down and pretend to be devout Catholics. We can catch her profile here."

I placed myself next to him, and saw a few seats from us an old Italian woman kneeling and praying fervently, whilst in a chair at her side sat a girl of about twenty-two.

A traveler notes that Chicago ladies are proverbially pale; that the lake winds do not produce a healthy color, but seem to blanch the complexion. There is more bloom even in the east winds of Boston, he says.

An Omaha man has a watch and chain made from the gold filings found in an old jewelry factory in Brooklyn. The boss jeweler was exceedingly careless, and the man who succeeded him in the business found a $60 diamond in the rubbish, besides $10,000 worth of filings.

The annual value of England's harvest of the sea has recently estimated by a competent person at a little over fourteen millions sterling, of which over three and a half millions are represented by the herring, and about six millions by all kinds of round and flat fish; shell-fish of all kinds also total up to three and a half million.

"Did you hear about that row yesterday, and, that Col. Peter Sandly was knocked down and Major Sampleby had his nose broken?"

"No, I didn't hear about it. How did it happen?"

"Why, they were discussing the tariff question, and it just happened in the regular course of conversation."—Texas Siftings.

Love is a strange affair! Why, we once knew a man who was dead in love with a fair young woman. He loved her so devotedly that he never told her that he was suffering from epilepsy, shingles and divers other diseases, or so much as lisped that his ancestors on both sides for three generations back had died in the lunatic asylum. He was too generous to pain the fair creature.—Boston Transcript.

No wood has ever been discovered that combines so many advantages for all purposes as California redwood. It is easily worked; it may be used green, just as it comes from the mill; it does not warp in drying, nor shrink or swell by exposure to the weather; it burns slowly, and when on fire is easily extinguished, because the wood contains no resin; it is brittle and breaks off squarely, so that in case of fire the firemen have no difficulty in cutting their way from house to house, and it does not rot in the ground like most other woods, and fence posts which have stood for thirty years are as sound today as when they were planted. The redwood grows only in California.

When a drummer has made up his mind to sell a merchant goods the merchant might as well make up his mind to buy. A Dallas merchant refused to buy any whisky from a St. Louis liquor drummer. "It's not worth while showing me your samples," said the merchant in a very determined manner: "I have no cellar to store any wine, even if I wanted to buy." The drummer put up his samples and disappeared. Half an hour afterward he burst into the merchant's counting-room, his face radiant with joy. "Allow me to congratulate you. Everything is arranged." "What's arranged?" "All about the cellar. I have hunted you up a cellar and rented it for you at $40 a month." Texas Siftings.

He had just returned from his wedding trip, and was going down town in a horse-car with his bride, who, in all the pride of her new garments and her new husband, was disposed to look down on humanity generally, and on a poor old man in particular, who sat opposite. "Who is that dreadful-looking creature Horatio?" she said. "I'm sure I don't know," replied the apple of her eye, with a slight blush and stammer; "some tramp, I suppose, who has begged his passage." Just then the aged person alluded to awoke from his reverie, and, adjusting his spectacles, quavered: "Why, bless me, if that isn't my grandson, Horatio! and that must be his wife! Don't color up so, boy; she's a right pretty girl, and you have no cause to be ashamed of her." There was an audible smile in that vehicle, which the happy pair did not stop to hear the last of.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

A Lot of Ladies'

Colored Cotton Hose, 12½c. per pair much below value. J. Erskine. d45-3in.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meteorological office:—Moderate winds, mostly north and east, fine weather, not much change in temperature.

Open-Air Meeting

Finding it difficult to get the young men into the meeting at their rooms these summer Sunday afternoons, the Young Men's Christian Association workers hold an open air meeting now in the Court House Park. An attentive audience listened to the remarks made by the young men yesterday.

Visiting Cricketers.

Ten of the Montreal cricketers arrived in town this morning and are registered at the Oriental. They look like gentlemen who could give a good account of themselves. The following are the names:—F. Stancliffe, captain; E. W. Arthy, T. B. Bell, J. Muir, W. Pinkney, G. W. Jones, A. F. Reevor, A. C. McDonnell, F. T. Short, Lacy.

A Lady Roller Skater.

The manager of the Lansdowne Roller Rink seems bound to keep up the attractions. Star after star is engaged for the delectation of its patrons. The latest attraction is the Star of America, the champion lady roller skater, Miss Jessie Wartz, of Rochester, who will give an exhibition of fancy roller skating at the Lansdowne on Wednesday and Thursday evenings next. Wherever Miss Wartz appears her graceful and wonderful movements are the theme of praise by the press and people. She will appear at the Lansdowne on the evenings of July 29th and 30th.

Almost an Accident.

A few minutes before seven o'clock this morning, as the train which carries the section men, was steaming up the "Missing Link," a man and women were crossing the bridge which spans the creek to the north of the Protestant Home, and had reached the centre of it when the loud whistle of the locomotive was heard at the curve. The couple lost all presence of mind, and instead of standing on the outer edge of the bridge, started back for the eastern end of it, and when that point was reached, jumped down the embankment, but not a moment too soon, as the engine touched the dress of the women.

An Injured Innocent.

We observe a letter of Mr. McNeil's in Saturday's Review in which he complains of personal attacks made upon him by this paper. We would say that on no occasion has the EXAMINER personally even spoken of Mr. McNeil, except to his credit. Our columns are always open to correspondence so long as it is conducted with reasonable fairness and propriety, and we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of correspondents. If Mr. McNeil has ever entered and been driven from the lists of correspondents we are not deserving of either the credit or discredit. When he states that the editor of this paper has pursued him with malignity or in any other way he writes what is absolutely false and without any foundation and tries to lift himself out of that retired mediocrity to which we had always consigned him. Without making a mountain out of a mole hill, we beg to say that no person connected with our staff has ever written or suggested any communication reflecting discreditably on Mr. McNeil.

Smokers!

Beware of cigars artificially flavored for the purpose of hiding the poor quality of tobacco used in flavored cigars. Insist upon having the old reliable brands—"CABLE" and "EL PADRE." 13d-25w-1y

Railroader's Picnic.

A Jolly Time at Hutton's Grove.

The regular annual picnic held by the employees of the Midland Division of the Grand Trunk Railway came off on Saturday at Hutton's grove, situated about two miles from Lindsay, a spot acknowledged to be one of the most beautiful picnic resorts in Ontario. Four passenger coaches arrived in town from the east on Saturday morning, and every coach was filled from door to door. To this train was added the Peterborough party, and the crowd, which numbered upwards of eight hundred, left the station at about 10:30, bound for Lindsay, which place was reached about noon. The grove was reached a short time afterwards, and when at one o'clock, everybody was doing justice to the edibles, there must have been over three thousand persons on the grounds. After a good deal of damage had been done to the "pies," the committee of management, Messrs. W. H. Mimms, J. Young, C. S. Goodrich, J. Lethbridge, D. McMillan, W. [illegible] announced the programme of sports, and despite the heat of the day, many able-bodied fellows entered in the various contests which took place, and resulted as follows:

100 YARDS RACE.—1st, E. Simpson, Uxbridge; 2nd, M. Foley, Port Hope.

TRAINMEN'S RACE.—1st, Geo. Jobbit, 2nd, S. Smith.

SECTIONMEN'S RACE.—1st, J. Foley.

ENGINEMEN'S RACE.—1st, M. Foley, 2nd, Miram Marsh.

BOY'S RACE.—1st, Richard Young.

GIRL'S RACE.—1st, Miss B. Hendren.

HOP, STEP AND JUMP.—1st, W. Routley, Brooklin, Ont.

RUNNING LONG JUMP.—1st, Geo. Rielly.

RUNNING HIGH JUMP.—1st, H. Connors, Peterborough.

BACKWARD RACE.—1st, Archie McPhane

SACK RACE.—1st, J. Kennedy.

THREE LEGGED RACE.—1st, Tapley and Raney.

OPEN 100 YARD RACE.—1st, W. Routley, 2nd, W. Gordon.

TUG OF WAR.—Won by the G. T. R. men.

PRIZE WALTZ.—Won by McCarthy, Haliburton, and Miss Cox, Peterborough.

POLKA.—Mr. H. Little and Mrs. E. Pym, Port Hope.

FAT MAN'S RACE.—Won by R. Bird.

SMOKING RACE.—J. Jobitt.

BEST LOOKING LADY.—Mrs. Jas. Young.

BEST LOOKING CONDUCTOR.—J. Lethbridge.

BEST JIG DANCER.—Miss Quinn.

BEST STEP DANCER.—Miss O'Donnell.

The pic-nic was a grand success in every way. Notwithstanding the large crowd, the slightest accident or occurrence did not take place to mar the pleasure of the day. The Grand Junction party arrived in town about 7.30 p.m., and having an hour and a half to wait for the arrival of the regular from the west, on which were the Peterborough people, with some of the eastern contingent, which took in the town, especially the roller rinks, for the time, and departed at 9.20 for the east. The general committee are to be complimented for the order which they kept throughout the proceedings of the day.

Just Received.

A lot of Linen Damask, Table Cloths and Napkins, various sizes; slightly imperfect but cheap. J. Erskine. d48-6in.

Death's Frequent Visitations.

In another part o fthis day's issue is the record of the death of a daughter of Mr. Michael O'Brien, George street. This makes the sixth child that Mr. O'Brien has lost by death in nine years.

Prompt Action.

The plate glass which was smashed a short time ago at the store of Mr. John McClelland, corner George and Hunter streets, is being replaced by a new one. This is due to the promptness of the insurance company with whom the risk was taken.

Shipment of Sheep.

On Saturday last Mr. W. H. Howden shipped to Montreal a car load of sheep purchased by that dealer in the township of Cavan. The shipment went via Grand Junction Railway and was composed of the best sheep that have been shipped so far this year.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

9 o'clock	70°	29.36°
1 o'clock	81°	29.25°
3 o'clock	81°	29.1°

Police Court.

This morning at the police court, James Van Ormas, led in by Constable Johnston, once more made his bow, and in response to the question, "were you drunk?" from the magistrate, answered, "yes, your honor." He was fined $5 or 15 days, but pleaded so hard to get off that the fine was reduced to $1, which he paid.

A Dangerous Slide.

On Saturday last, Mr. E. Rogers, a carpenter engaged on the work now going on at St. Peter's Cathedral, whilst walking upon the old roof just before starting to work at one o'clock, slipped and fell. He slid down the roof for some distance, but when within a few feet of the "jumping off" place, came to a full stop in a manner which he can't explain, and felt no good over the "full stop" as compared with the "period" which might have been put to his existence, had he fallen to the ground, that he did not work for the balance of the day.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Saturday's Cricket Match.

The match which took place on Saturday last between sides chosen from the association and representing the Old Country and Canada resulted in favor of the Canadians by one run. The scores made were: Old Country, 63; Canada, 64.

Oddfellows' Excursion.

On Saturday it was announced that the return tickets for the Oddfellows' excursion to Lindsay, on Tuesday, July 28th would be $1.00. Since that better rates have been secured and the return tickets are now reduced to 75c. The committee would be pleased to have all Oddfellows who can possibly do so, to attend next Tuesday.

Change in Time.

The change which was announced to take place some time ago on the C. P. R., came into effect this morning. Henceforward trains will arrive from the east at 8.31 a.m., 7.35 a.m. and 6.42 p.m.; and from the west at 11.31 a.m., 9.05 p.m. and 10.56 p.m. The changes made in the time going west are not very great, there being only one minute difference in the early morning and the evening trains.

Lacrosse in the Cities.

In the series of matches played on Saturday, the Montrealers defeated the Ontarios three straight games, in Montreal. The Shamrocks, of that city, did not fare so well in Toronto, however, and went east on Saturday night with only one game to their credit. As matters now stand, the Montrealers are ahead in the race for the pennant, with the Shamrocks and Torontos even. The Ontarios have not placed a game to their credit so far.

Women's Foreign Missionary Society.

In anticipation of the increased poverty and suffering which, owing to the late rebellion, must inevitably prevail amongst the Indian families of our Northwest, the executive committee of St. Paul's auxiliary of the above society have agreed to send a box of clothing suitable for the approaching winter season. They hereby notify the members of the W.F.M.S., the congregation worshipping in St. Paul's church, and other friends, that contributions for this purpose will be most thankfully received in any of the following articles:—Cast off woollen clothing (not too much worn), woollen underwear of all sizes and for both sexes, but specially for children, that they may go to school; jackets, coats, skirts, stockings, socks, yarn, clouds, mufflers and mitts. The box must leave Peterborough on August 15th. Contributions marked, "For Indians of N.W.," will be received by Mr. Stewart, sexton of St. Paul's Church, at his house, Murray street.

Personal.

Rev. Mr. Munro left this morning for a six weeks' vacation with his family in Gloucester, Mass.

Mr. James Henry, of the firm of Dumble & Henry, and Mr. J. D. McIlmoyle, left this morning for a week's sojourn in New York city.

Mr. Robert Tully returned to town from Iowa, on Saturday, evening, where he had been spending a few weeks with friends, accompanied by his neice, Miss Tully, daughter of Mr. William Tully, formerly of North Monaghan, who will spend the summer with friends here.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opporite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

YOUNG MEN'S REFORM CLUB.

We again beg to remind the Liberal young men of Peterborough, of the preliminary meeting, to consider the organization of a Young Men's Reform Club for this town, to be held in the office of Mr. E. W. Cox, in rear of the telegraph office, to night. It is desirable that there should be a good attendance, and although many young men are out of town on their holidays, and there are many attractions at home, there should be a sufficient attendance to arrange the preliminaries of organization. There will be a convention of the Young Liberals of Ontario, held in Toronto on September 15th and 16th, and it is desirable that the Peterborough club should be organized and represented at such convention.

A meeting will be held on Thursday night in Professor Parker's rooms, over Hartley's music store, for the organization of a Philharmonic Society for Peterborough. The project is in the right hands, those of Prof. Parker and Mr. Hampshire, to be a success.

Parlor Roller Rink.

On Thursday next the Parlor Roller Rink, Water street, will be closed for the heated term, many of its patrons being out of town for their holidays. In the interval between Thursday and the 1st of September, when the rink will be re-opened, the floor will be overhauled, skates refitted and everything put in readiness for Sept 1st.

Worse Than the Heat.

The intense overwhelming heat is bad enough, but when to it are added the horrors of an itinerant accordeon fiend dolefully squeezing out "Climbing the Golden Stairs," it is agony at a white heat. His blindness was the only circumstance that secured the performer immunity from aggravated assault.

Personal.

Mr. D. R. Weir, of Kingston, winner of the mathematical scholarship at Queen's University, is in town visiting friends.

The Battle News and Birstall Advertiser, Scotland, of July the 11th, contains the full report, taken from the DAILY EXAMINER, of Prof. Parker's piano recital, held recently in St. Paul's Church School Room. The News also speaks highly of Mr. Parker's musical abilities.

From Belleville.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I have had the pleasure of seeing and reading a few copies of the DAILY EXAMINER, and as an old friend, allow me to congratulate you and all concerned on the complete success of your new venture. I am sure the enterprising and appreciative citizens of that ambitious suburb of ours will not neglect the necessary support to make such a literary ornament a permanent and flourishing institution. The Weekly EXAMINER has long held a high rank among its confreres for literary and typographical excellence, and the DAILY well sustains the reputation. The field from which you must expect to reap a crop of shekels, may be somewhat limited in area, yet I predict a bright future for your DAILY, and amusement happiness for all connected with it.

Last Wednesday was a red-letter day in Belleville. You know all about it. The home-coming of our brave boys, after achieving such signal triumphs and evincing such conspicuous bravery, was made an occasion for a demonstration, the like of which never had and probably never will again be seen in the Bay of Quinte section. It was a spontaneous and heartfelt tribute of love and respect for as noble a body of men as ever wore the British uniform and fought under the "old flag." This does not refer to the Belleville contingent only, although for the local companies the first thought was given, and for reasons too well known to be repeated. The unanimity of sentiment and harmony of action that conceived and executed the decorations and expressions of pleasure were born of a deep-seated feeling of pride in the achievements of "the heroes of Batoche."

There was no mistaking the signs on the outer walls of the city. They spoke more eloquently than the tongue could the thoughts that swelled the hearts of the people. The brave men, browned and ragged from exposure and hardships, could express their thanks for such a home greeting by mute surprise and admiration. The demonstration seemed to overwhelm them with its greatness and earnestness. What they had met with in Toronto, Port Hope and elsewhere prepared them in a measure for the welcome home, but when they reached the depot and emerged from the cars there was such a rush and roar of friendly voices, such an outburst of joyful enthusiasm as to convince them that, to the returning soldiers as to others, "there is no place like home." The whole population had turned out to greet the "heroes," and each person vied with his fellows in a demonstration of pleasure. I have never seen the fair City of the Bay look so well. The decorations, though less pretentious than when the incorporation as a city was celebrated, eight years ago, were much more harmonious and beautiful. Everything was propitious, excepting the heat, which was a trifle too intense, and all the proceedings passed off most agreeably.

But this is a digression. I started with the intention of complimenting THE DAILY EXAMINER only, but have devoted the major portion of my space to our jubilee. Well, the temptation was strong, and you will excuse me. I repeat my congratulations, and wish THE EXAMINER increased prosperity.

Hastings.

(From Our Own Correspondence.)

Our boys having returned home from the Northwest were treated to a dinner on Thursday the 23rd inst., in the Clarendon House, given in "mine host's" usual good style. The tables, besides being well laden with good things in the edible line, were handsomely decorated with flowers, conspicuous amongst which was a bouquet sent by Mrs. Geo. A. Cox of Peterborough. The ladies of the village also contributed generously towards the decoration. Much dissatisfaction, however, prevails amongst the people here on account of the manner in which the dinner was gotten up. When intimation of it was given the general understanding was that it would be a public banquet, and that the village was to extend a hearty welcome to the boys. Instead, however, the few friends of the private party who got it up were invited instead of the many friends of the boys.

The Council were very dilatory in deciding whether they would present the boys with something or nothing, and at last concluded that they should present them with something in the shape of medals. Instead of encouraging home trade as part of them wished done, some of our city fathers thought it better to send to the city for them and pay double the price they would have had to do at home. However, the cost of medals is so insignificant, it is rumored that the boys do not intend accepting them.

The grading and levelling of the grounds around the Town Hall has been completed, and presents quite a respectable appearance in contrast to its former state. We hope our village fathers will not stop here, but that in the near future we will see the grounds enclosed with a fence and shade trees.

As the new Methodist parsonage is about completed the Ladies Aid purpose opening it with a social on the moving in of the Rev. W. Lambert and family. The social to be held on Tuesday, Aug. 4th., in the old Temperance Hall, opposite the parsonage. A hearty invitation is extended to all.

The R. T. of T. Society of this village, we are pleased to learn, is in a very flourishing and progressive condition at the present time. The average attendance of members being from 25 to 30 per weekly meeting. Also as many as five being initiated in one evening. An interesting programme is furnished each evening in the way of songs, readings, recitations and speeches. We hope this state of things will still continue as there is much need of great work being done here.

The annual pic-nic excursion of the Methodist Sunday School, in union with the Norwood Methodist Sunday School, took place on Tuesday last per steamer Beaver to Idyl-Wild and Harwood. A large number from both schools were present, and both old and young spent a pleasant and enjoyable time.

A presentation took place in the Methodist Sunday School on Sunday afternoon. After the opening exercises were over, the Superintendent, Mr. H. Morton, addressed the school, remarking he was pleased once more to be able to be again with them after an absence of some weeks through illness. He then, to the surprise of the recipients, as well as the greater portion of the school, asked Mr. Jas. Anderson and Mr. H. Riggs to please come forward, with four others of the young men's Bible class. An address for Mr. Jas. Anderson was then read by Mr. B. F. Doxsee, and one for Mr. H. Riggs by Mr. J. Wilson, after which they were each presented with splendidly bound Bibles and handsome bouquets. These were tokens of respect their fellow associates paid them on their return from the North-West. Short addresses were then made by superintendent Mr. J. H. Scriver and Mr. Morton, sen.

Our village was aroused on Monday morning [illegible] fire, when it was discovered that Mr. Mills' staves were on fire on the island. The loss will be considerable to Mr. Mills as he had 150,000 staves packed there. It is the supposed work of an incendiary.

Explanatory.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I understand that the absence of the Battalion Band of the 57th on the occasion of the reception of the volunteers created some remark. Allow me to explain that there was not a single member of the band but regretted most deeply that they were not present. The band was informed on the best of authority that the volunteers would not not be home till Thursday, and in that event they would certainly have been on hand; but arrangements were changed and the members missed the chance of welcoming home our brave volunteers, an event deeply deplored by every one connected with the organization.

General Grant.

The Dead General to be Buried in Central Park, New York, on Saturday Next—The Queen's Sympathy.

MOUNT MCGREGOR, July 28.—It was decided this afternoon that General Grant should be buried in Central Park, New York. The remains will lie quietly at the cottage in the room where the General died until Tuesday afternoon next, when the funeral cortege will be placed on a special train and conveyed directly and without demonstration to Albany. The remains will be borne to the capitol building, where they will lie in state until Wednesday noon. Then and thence the dead General will be conveyed by funeral train to New York, arriving on Wednesday evening, where the body will remain in state until Saturday, when it will be borne to its last resting place in Central Park. The cottage in which the General died will never again be occupied. Mr. Drexel will present it to the nation or commonwealth, with all its belongings. Many messages of condolence were received by the family this afternoon. Among them were the following:

"WASHINGTON, D. C.,

To Mrs. U. S. Grant:

Her Majesty the Queen requests me to convey to yourself and family her sincere condolence on the death of General Grant.

CONCEALING THE FACTS.

The government seems bound not to allow the facts respecting the Northwest rebellion to come out. It is reported that General Middleton has in his possession certain documents which would throw a flood of light on the causes of the outbreak, and that the government has ordered the General not to give them up. If the government did not have a strong feeling as to its guilt in the premises, they would be most anxious to put forward every document that could throw the least ray of light on the causes of the outbreak. But they dread exposure, and will make every effort to suppress the truth. In their efforts to shield themselves the Government will not hesitate to keep back information, and thus Riel will be acquitted for want of evidence. Then, the supplying of money to enable him to live in luxury in a foreign country will not, after Sir John's past experience in this line, be a very difficult matter to compass. Sir John had better move carefully. If he connives at the escape of Riel, he will arouse a storm of indignation that even he will find it hard to quell.

THE BURDEN OF TAXATION.

Though the tax is indirect and therefore not so severely felt, yet the burden is a fearful one, and what is worse under the present Government, it is daily increasing and there is not only no attempt at retrenchment but the extravagance and waste are daily growing greater. It is high time that the people woke from their dream of false security. With the annual expenditure nearly forty millions a year, against twenty-three millions a year, when the present government took power, seven years ago; with over thirty millions added to our debt last year, and about thirteen millions this year, it is surely time to call a halt. The result of this extravagance when properly looked at, is something fearful to contemplate. The Ottawa Free Press points out that every workingman who has a wife and three children—making the average five in family—pays $38.00 in Dominion taxes this year. If he earns the average wages of a dollar a day—he works six weeks and two days—for the Dominion treasury—before he earns a dollar to feed and clothe himself and children. It does not matter whether the taxes are direct or indirect—they come out of his wages all the same! It is this constant drain—this invisible suction—which makes the poor man's wages not go so far as they used to. Workingmen generally complain that a dollar does not go so far as it used to go, but the reason is obvious. It cannot go so far when the Dominion tax collector claims a larger toll on the sugar, clothing and necessaries. Reduce the taxes and times will improve!

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Young Men's Liberal convention will be held in Shaftesbury Hall, Toronto, on September 15 and 16. Every Young Men's Liberal Club in the province should be represented.

The Conservative journals are crowing considerably over the late loan negotiated in Great Britain, but it does not appear that there is much to boast of when we consider the vast resources of Canada and the fact that the loan was placed on a glutted money market where money is a drug and simply pining for investment; where the banks, instead of paying interest on deposits, are obligingly willing to keep money safely if they are paid one per cent for the trouble.

Of the 231 boys in the Reformatory at Penetanguishene about 100 are said to be lads brought from England by the various emigration agencies. If this is true, the system of transporting young criminals from England to Canada ought to be stopped at once. The people of Ontario have to support them after they get here, and the Hamton Times thinks we have enough of that species of missionary labor to perform on our own account.

How carefully the Dominion Government guard the interests of the people. They not only ignore the wants of the people, and oppress them, as was done in the Northwest, till simple minded men break into rebellion, but they ignore the constitution in the most flagrant manner. Hon. Mr. Pope has been "acting" minister of railways and canals, when there was positively no minister to act for. The facts are these:—Sir Chas. Tupper resigned the position of Minister of Railways and no successor to him has been appointed. Mr. Pope has acted as Minister of Railways, but for whom? For nobody! There is no Minister of Railways. The requirements of the law have not been complied with. No contract, it is argued, entered into between Mr. Pope as acting Minister of Railways and any public contractor is binding upon the government if the government at any time desire to repudiate it. This is the awkward position many public contractors, who have acted in good faith, are put in, by the government's policy of blundering procrastination.

Sir Charles Tupper.

Sir Charles Tupper is described by his Halifax organ, as being "one of the busiest men in Great Britain." It says that "except the Prince of Wales and the Mayor he attends as many meetings and makes as many speeches as any public man in the metropolis. Every week brings in a list of three or four gatherings where Sir Charles speaks for Canada or, as more often happens, for the British colonies. He is easily first among the colonial agents in London, and, as in the case of the meeting with the new Colonial Secretary, is usually spokesman for a deputation of the representatives. He is always direct, practical and well informed." Then, if he is so "easily first" the material of which the Colonial agents are made is not of the primest quality. We do not deny that Sir Charles is direct and practical; but that he is always well informed is open to doubt. Indeed, it frequently happened that, whether or not he was well informed, his statements in Parliament were the reverse of accurate. We need go no further than instance his announcements and promises during the session of 1884, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are ready to admit that Sir Charles has an unlimited amount of self-assurance, and that has, no doubt, placed him ahead of far more able and withal more modest men. We wonder what the object of the Halifax Herald can be in digging the former member for Cumberland out of his self-chosen retirement. Does he again desire to enter Canadian political life, and is he fearful that some one should get ahead of him in the race for Sir John Macdonald's succession? It may be that, discovering Sir Leonard Tilley is practically out of the field, he thinks his star is in the ascendant, since it was only the coming Lieut-Governor of New Brunswick, whom report says he considered to be in his way.—Montreal Times.

Curing Cheese in Boxes.

By Prof. L. B. Arnold.

For three years I have been experimenting in curing cheese in boxes, with satisfactory results. When taken from the press the cheese are laid on top of the boxes till the surface moisture is well dried off, and then, with scaleboards under and over them, are laid into close-fitting and well-seasoned boxes and the cover put on without cutting the top of the box down to the level of the cheese. This leaves a little air-space above the cheese, which is useful. In this condition the boxes may be set on the curing room floor or piled one above another in almost any place where there is a favorable average temperature. After standing ten days the boxes should be turned over to prevent the moisture from settling to one side of the cheese. Afterward they will need turning only a few times at intervals of three or four weeks.

Before going to market they should be taken from the boxes, and the mould, if any has formed on them, rubbed off and the surface burnished up, and then, with new scaleboards, put back into the boxes, which should then be cut down to fit the cheese, and they are ready to ship. In this condition I have kept cheese from six to twenty-four months with very little accumulation of mould on the outside; no more than could be readily rubbed off, and none at all on the inside, and without ill effects in any other respect. The advantages of this mode of curing are that there is 20 per cent. less shrinkage and 50 per cent. less rind than when cured on shelves and open to the air. It also protects the cheese from the wide and sudden changes of temperature in upper rooms and makes the curing even and safe under conditions that would otherwise do serious injury to the cheese.

A badly made cheese will not become a fancy article by being cured in a box, but it will be better than if cured where the temperature is constantly running up and down to wide extremes. It also saves a vast amount of labor in daily turning, rubbing and greasing to keep the surface from drying and checking, and from danger of flies and sticking to the shelves, and it almost entirely overcomes the imperfect construction of curing rooms. Cheese are much better off in good boxes than on shelves in an open curing room, where they feel all the sudden changes of the weather. White mould will accumulate on them more or less, but unless put into green boxes there will be no more than accumulates in crossing the ocean, which is not enough to do them any harm.

An Iowa cheese maker wishes to know which would be the better place for curing cheese—an upper room, boarded inside and outside the studs with matched boards, with plastering between them, and ceiled with matched boards over head, or a basement with a good cement floor? Cheese can be nicely cured in either place. If kept on shelves the basement would be preferable; the temperature would be more uniform and moister in the basement; if a little damp the cheese dry out less and cure evener, and in the end make a more meaty and richer cheese than in dryer and more changeable upper rooms, but a room should not be so damp as to mould very much. In the upper room described cheese will cure quite as well in boxes as on shelves in the basement. If fairly well made the box will prove a protection against huffing in hot days, and secure a solid and meaty texture, with a clean and good flavor.

A Fable.

A swallow flew down and plucked a small piece of wool from the back of a sheep. The sheep was very indignant and denounced the swallow in scathing terms.

"Why do you make such a fuss?" asked the swallow. "You never say anything when the shepherd takes all the wool you have on your back?"

"That's a different thing entirely," replied the sheep. "if you know how to take my wool without hurting me, as the shepherd does, I would not object so much."

This fable is merely intended to explain why millions can be stolen with impunity, while the theft of a pair of boots or a loaf of bread is punished with such severity.—Texas Siftings.

Reply.

I met him on the road, gesticulating wildly, with a bunch of weeds in one hand and a clod of dirt in the other. He was swearing. His face was dropsical in hue and shapeless as a raising of bread. Suddenly he sat down violently. He had "killed that one, anyhow." He said most uncomplimentary things about them and consigned them to regions of perpetual ice—to get cooled off. He remarked that "helf couldn't make the spiked things hotter." I recognised in him a neighbor by his wearing a coat of mine.

"Hello, Bill," I said, "what on earth is the matter?" He fired his clod at his knee-cap, waved his bunch of weeds, jumped ten feet sideways, grabbing fiercely at the slack of his pantaloons.

"Matter? I wish I could see as well as you kin. I was plowin' over thar for buckwheat, and a yaller jackets' nest got loose. Won't you take me home—and holler to the boys to go hunt them mules?"—Detroit Free Press.

Where We Got the "Cue."

The game of billiards was invented about the middle of the sixteenth century by a London pawnbroker named William Kew. In wet weather this pawn broker was in the habit of taking down the three balls, and with the yard measure pushing them, billiard fashion, from the counter into the stalls. In time the idea of a board with side pockets suggested itself. A black-letter manuscript says: "Master William Kew did make one board whereby a game is played with three balls; and all the young men are greatly recreated thereat, chiefly the young clergymen from St. Pawles; hence one of ye strokes was named a 'cannon,' having been by one of ye said clergymen invented. The game is now known by the name of "bill-yard," because William, or Bill, Kew did first play it with a yard-measure. The stick is now called a 'kew,' or 'kue.'" It is easy to understand how "bill-yard" has been modernized into "billiard," and the transformation of "kew," or "kue" into "cue," is equally apparent.

Editorial Tribulations.

One of the tribulations that often confront the editor of a paper, more especially a country paper, is innocently caused by those people who are anxious to help him out by finding something that will "do to fill up his paper," says the Hoosier. These people all mean well, but they labor under a misconception of the editor's needs, and are often offended when they find that the clipping they took out of a patent-medicine almanac, or some other publication, and kindly carried to their favorite local paper for "fillin'," does not appear.

It is hard to convince people that the editor is always able to wield the shears, even when his pen fails, and is at all times a better judge of what miscellaneous matter should be printed in his sheet, as well as more competent to decide as to the freshness of the article and whether it has ever appeared in the columns of the journal over which he presides. These things are provoking, yet they are more easily disposed of than are the voluntary amateur contributions that come in.

A budding poet may be kindly checked, and even an embryo humorist may be held aloof, but it is harder to dispose of the sweet girl graduates whose tinted, frangipani-scented, and ribbon-tied essays have been declared by parents, sisters, brothers, friends, and sweethearts to be "perfectly splendid." The sweet g. g. timidly offers her essays to the editor, and is piqued to see that he is not exceedingly eager to get it. Bless her soul, when she, dressed all in fleecy white, read to a good-natured audience her learned essay on "The Past—Where is It?" and was applauded to the echo and buried in bouquets and praised and petted and flattered till she was "actually rattled," she never dreamed for a moment that a cross-eyed, sandy-haired editor would be so lost to decency as not to see at a glance what a literary treasure he might have to print.

It would only take, say, from one to three or four columns of space, and would probably not be read by half a dozen people outside of her own family, and the majority of subscribers would wonder what the editor meant by printing such rot. "Rot?" Ah, yes, dear girl, it sounds cruel, but when you are older you will say the same and thank the "hateful old crank" for not printing the stuff. Now bear in mind, it is agreed that the essay is good, tip-top—as an essay; but were you to see it in print you would be so ashamed of yourself that the sight of a paper would throw you into convulsions.

YOUNG MEN

By an Eminent Divine

THE REV. DE WITT TALMAGE SAYS:—"How a man with no surplus of estate, but still enough money to pay the Premium of a Life Insurance Policy, can refuse to do it, and then look his children in the face and say his prayers at night on going to bed, expecting them to be answered, is a mystery to me that I have never yet been able to fathom. Chapter III—Continued.

A girl who might have belonged to almost any country. The eyebrows and cast-down lashes said that her eyes were dark, but the pure pale complexion, the delicate straight features, the thick brown hair might, under circumstances, have been claimed by any nation, although had I met her alone I should have said she was English. She was well but plainly dressed, and her manner told me she was no stranger to the church. She did not look from side to side, and up and down, after the way of a sightseer. She sat without moving until her companion had finished her prayers. So far as one could judge from her appearance she was in church for no particular object, either devotional or critical. Probably she may have come to bear the old woman at her side company. This old woman, who had the appearance of a superior kind of servant, seemed, from the passionate appeal she was addressing to Heaven, to be in want of many things. I could see her thin lips working incessantly, and although her words were inaudible it was evident her petitions were heartspoken and sincere.

But the girl by her side neither joined her in her prayers nor looked at her. Ever motionless as a statue—her eyes ever cast down—apparently wrapped in deep thought, and, I fancied, sad thought, she sat, showing us the while no more of her face than that perfect profile. Kenyon had certainly not over-praised her. Hers was a face which had a peculiar attractiveness for me, the utter repose of it not being the least of that charm. I was growing very anxious to see her full face, but as I could not do so without positive rudeness, was compelled to wait until she might chance to turn her head.

Presently the old Italian woman appeared to think she had done her religious duty. Seeing she was preparing to cross herself, I rose and sauntered down the church toward the door. In a few minutes the girl and her companion passed me, and I was able to see her to better advantage, as she waited while the old woman dipped her fingers in the holy water. She was undoubtedly beautiful; but there was something strange in her beauty. I made this discovery when, for a moment, her eyes met mine. Dark and glorious as those eyes were, there was a dreamy, far-away look in them—a look that seemed to pass over one and see what was behind the object gazed at. This look gave me a curious impression, but as it was only for a second that my eyes met hers, I could scarcely say whether the impression was a pleasant or an unpleasant one.

The girl and her attendant lingered a few moments at the door, so that Kenyon and I passed out before them. By common consent we paused outside. The action may have been a rude one, but we were both anxious to see the departure of the girl whose appearance had so greatly interested us. As we came through the door of the church, I noticed a man standing near the steps—a middle-aged man of gentlemanly appearance. He was rather round-shouldered, and wore spectacles. Had I felt any interest in determining his station in life, I should have adjudged him to one of the learned professions. There could be no mistake as to his nationality; he was Italian to the backbone. He was evidently waiting for some one; and when the girl, followed by the old woman, came out of San Giovanni, he stepped forward and accosted them.

The old woman gave a little sharp cry of surprise. She took his hand and kissed it. The girl stood apparently apathetic. It was evident that the gentleman's business lay with the old servant. He spoke a few words to her; then drawing her aside the two walked away to some distance, under the shadow of the church, and to all appearance were talking earnestly and volubly, but ever and anon casting a look in the direction of the girl.

As her companion left her she walked on a few paces, then paused and turned as though waiting for the old woman. Now it was that we were able to see her perfect figure and erect carriage to full advantage. Being some little way off, we could look at her without committing an act of rudeness or indiscretion.

"She is beautiful," I said, more to myself than to Kenyon.

"Yes, she is—but not so beautiful as I thought. There is something wanting, yet it is impossible to say what it is. Is it animation or expression?"

"I can see nothing wanting," I said, so enthusiastically that Kenyon laughed aloud.

"Do English gentlemen stare at their own countrywomen and appraise them in public places like this; or is it a custom adopted for the benefit of Italians?"

This impudent question was asked by some one close to my side. We turned simultaneously, and saw a tall man of about thirty standing just behind us. His features were regular, but their effect was not a pleasant one. You felt at a glance that a sneering mouth was curtained by the heavy mustache, and those dark eyes and eyebrows were apt to frown with sullen anger. At present the man's expression was that of haughty arrogance—a peculiarly galling expression, especially so I find when adopted by a foreigner toward an Englishman. That he was a foreigner it was easy to see, in spite of his perfectly accented English.

A hot reply was upon my lips, but Kenyon, who was a young man of infinite resource and well able to say and do the right thing in the right place, was before me. He raised his hat and made a sweeping bow, so exquisitely graduated that it was impossible to say where apology ended and mockery began.

"Signor," he said, "an Englishman travels through your fair land to see and praise all that is beautiful in nature and art. If our praise offends we apologise."

The man scowled, hardly knowing whether my friend was in jest or in earnest.

"If we have done wrong will the signor convey our apologies to the lady? His wife, or shall I say his daughter?"

As the man was young, the last question was sarcastic.

"She is neither," he rapped out. Kenyon bowed.

"Ah, then a friend. Let me congratulate the signor, and also congratulate him on his proficiency in our language."

The man was growing puzzled; Kenyon spoke so pleasantly and naturally.

"I have spent many years in England," he said, shortly.

"Many years! I should scarcely have thought so, as the signor has not picked up that English peculiarity which is far more important than accent or idiom."

Kenyon paused and looked into the man's face so innocently and inquiringly that he fell into the trap.

"And pray what may that be?" he asked.

"To mind one's own business," said Kenyon, shortly and sharply, turning his back to the last speaker, as if the discussion was at an end.

The tall man's face flushed with rage. I kept my eyes upon him, fearing he would make an assault upon my friend, but he thought better of it. With a curse he turned on his heel, and the matter ended.

While this conversation was in progress, the old Italian woman had left her learned-looking friend, and having rejoined the young girl, the two went upon their way. Our ill-conditioned Italian, after his discomfiture, walked across to the man who had been talking to the old servant, and taking his arm went with him in another direction. They were soon out of sight.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A fresh Chinese servant at Sacramento was instructed in skimming the cream off the milk, and did it well, but no cream appeared for the morning coffee. It was found that he carefully skimmed off the cream and threw it in the slop bucket.

"I'll take it out of his hide," remarked Jim to Mildred, referring in a towering passion to some injustice done him by a schoolmate. "Don't take it out of his hide, Jim," replied the high school girl, "extract it from his epidermis."

An Irish newspaper publishes a poem, the opening line of which is "Do ghlacfain tu gan ba gan punt, gan aircamb spreidh." We don't know when we have seen a more striking metaphor more beautifully expressed. The author has the "divine afflatus" the worst way.—Norristown Herald.

"I've said often that I would take means to prevent young men from coming around my house," said a father the other day, "and I've done it. My daughter is too young to think of marriage." "What have you done?" asked a neighbor; "bought a dog?" "No, I've bought my daughter a piano."

Women do not do much talking to themselves outside. They do an awful lot of thinking, though. I only recollect one woman overheard soliloquizing, and she was heard saying: "Three yards—no, that won't be enough." Did you ever try to catch the conversation of two women as they pass? Well, you needn't, it's never interesting.

There was a large boiler of scalding water over a fire in the yard, and several black children playing near it. Suddenly a shrill voice was heard from inside the shanty: "You, George Washington, keep away from dat ar biler. D'reotly you is gwine ter upset de biler and scald yerself to def; and when you is, you'll be de fust one to say, "Twasn't me, mammy.' "—Texas Siftings.

An Irishman was once threatened with dismissal by his employer on the ground of stupidity and perfect inability to learn anything. Pat protested he had learned something in that service, and, on being challenged to state it, replied: "Shure, I have learnt that sixteen cwt. makes a ton, bedad."

A German has patented an invention which stamps him as a Yankee by nature, if not by birth. It consists of a little book whose leaves are made of perfumed toilet soap, and is meant especially for travelers. When he wants to wash his hands he simply tears out a leaf (one is sufficient for the purpose); and the book can be put back dry into the pocket.

A fifteen pound cannon ball has been found on Chimney Island, St. Lawrence River. It bears the marks of great age, and was probably used in the engagement at the capture of Fort Levi, on that island in 1760. Israel Putnam, so conspicuous in the Revolution, was Lieutenant Colonel with the English army under Lord Amherst, and led the capture of the fort.

Cincinnati is "all torn up" over a proposal of the Telephone Company to increase the tariff from $100 to $120 a year. The Commercial Gazette says the income of the company is now more than $260,000 annually, and the proposed increase will raise it to $316,000, and advises that the people band together and quit its use rather than submit to the extortion. There ought to be some way in which to reach such monopolies and break them down. If the laws are not adequate as they now are, let them be changed.—Indianapolis Times.

The present average of speaking in the United States Senate is about 150 words per minute, though there are several speakers who utter more than 200. Among the fastest speakers at present are Senators Beck, Hawley, Plumb, and Morgan. Beck leads the list. Senator George, of Mississippi, is perhaps the slowest. Daniel Webster was a very slow talker, and he would not average over 100 words a minute. Henry Clay spoke much faster, rolling out about 150 words a minute. Calhoun was also slow until he became roused up with enthusiasm of his subject, when his words would flow more rapidly.—N. O. Times Democrat.

A Lot of Ladies'

Colored Cotton Hose, 12½c. per pair much below value. J. Erskine. d48-3in.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Moderate east and south winds, generally fair weather, with thunder storms in northern Ontario, slightly higher temperature.

Say Always the Best.

A customer of Mr. Stethem's called at the Hardware Store last week to complain that a length of hose in use only 10 days had burst, and that it must have been defective as it was carefully used. Mr. Stethem sent on the complaint to New York and four days after received instructions to give new length of hose and that the customer might also keep the old length.

Dangerous Position.

Yesterday afternoon, during the progress of the cricket match in Ashburnham, Lacy, the crack batsman of the Montreal club, took advantage of a ball which was pitched a little wide of the wickets, and punished it severely, but came nearly punishing more severely some of the ladies who were seated in front of the grand stand, the ball striking with great force against the boarding just above their heads.

Charlotte Street Sabbath School Picnic

The annual picnic of the Charlotte Street Methodist S. S. was held to-day at Campbelltown. The Golden Eye left the wharf a little after eight, bearing a happy party of excursionists. The day has been fine and we have no doubt but that the little ones had a most enjoyable day under the supervision of their esteemed Superintendent, Mr. A. L. Davis, the pastor of the church, Rev. F. H. Wallace and the other willing hands, that are continually doing good in that church and Sabbath School.

A Lively Chase.

Last evening about seven o'clock, a man was noticed by a few gentlemen standing near the C. P. R. station, running west on Dalhousie street, and pursued rather closely by another, who, with the assistance of a friend, caught his man at the corner of Aylmer street, and made anxious enquiries for ninety dollars, a sum of money belonging to him, and of which he accused the other to be in possession. The other denied the charge, and on being asked to "shell out," turned his pockets inside out, and showed the party of three or four who had collected at the corner, that all he possessed was eighty cents and a pipeful of tobacco.

Horticultural.

A meeting of the directors of the Peterborough Horticultural Society was held on Monday afternoon, in the office of the Toronto Bank. The prize list was gone over, and after making some alterations and adding several new articles to the list, it was ordered to be printed. The show will be held in the Water-street Roller Rink, on Tuesday, the 8th of September. By-laws setting forth upon what conditions the Court House Park is open to the public are being prepared, subject to the approval of the Town Council. Mr. Nesbitt, jailor, was appointed caretaker. It is the intention of the society to request the Town Council to endow Mr. Nesbitt with the powers of a policeman (with the exception of the power to draw a salary), so that he may be enabled to arrest at once any one violating the by-laws of the Park.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Willow and Wicket.

Montreal vs. Peterborough.

Yesterday Montreal played her first match against Peterborough, and perhaps this was the most exciting and pleasurable game of cricket ever played on the Ashburnham grounds.

The visitors are all first-class cricketers and their team comprises some of the best players in the Dominion. Their bowling was excellent, their fielding faultless and batting greatly above the average.

On the occasion the home eleven put in the field one of their best teams, who did full credit to themselves and won high praise from the many lovers of the game here.

Peterborough first took to the bat, to the trundling of Lacey and Stancliffe, Ray and Norley representing the home team: Norley was the first to go, being thrown out for five runs. Rutherford succeeded him, and was caught for one run. Rogers then entered, but was early stumped. Hamilton, Max, gathered together eight runs, and then fell a victim to Lacy, as did also Stradby, for seven runs. Hammond with [illegible] ter and Logan with two runs each, [illegible] the Peterborough scoring [illegible] to a sum total of 51 runs.

Arthy and Bell were the [illegible] representatives of the Montrealers in batting, and before separation had rolled up 18 runs. Pinkney followed, but was caught off Logan for six runs. Short with 13 not out, and Beevor with 17, perhaps showed the best form for the visitors. The total of their innings was 74.

In the second innings of the home eleven, Ray, Norley, Rogers, Hamilton Max and Craven specially distinguished themselves, making 11, 7, 16, 12 and 7 respectively, and when the last wicket fell the telegraph showed 77 for Peterborough. Montreal then entered upon their second venture with 54 runs to make to win, Logan and Norley again bowling. Wickets fell fast and thick for a reward of their excellent judgment, and when 9 wickets fell for 41 runs, Peterboro' certainly had begun to feel confident of victory. But it was destined otherwise and Montreal won by one wicket after a splendid exhibition of the game.

The fielding of Peterborough men was simply perfection, Carter especially winning applause. Rutherford behind the wickets did splendid service stumping no less than 5 wickets. Following is the score:

The Riverside Park.

The Riverside Park will be utilized this evening by the lacrosse club, who will henceforth practice there on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. On the evenings of Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday the baseballers will hold the turf. The nine for the season will be chosen in a day or two, and the next game which will take place in town will most assuredly surprise the people.

Peterborough Locks.

The Peterborough Lock Factory is now ready to receive orders for their surpassingly beautiful and excellent goods. The first order—24 dozen—for the goods of the company, was placed to-day by Mr. George Stethem, hardware merchant. A representative of the company leaves to-day on a tour to solicit orders throughout the Province, and we trust that he will meet with the success that the excellence of the work turned out by this new industry deserves.

A Lady Roller Skater.

The manager of the Lansdowne Roller Rink seems bound to keep up the attractions. Star after star is engaged for the delectation of its patrons. The latest attraction is the Star of America, the champion lady roller skater, Miss Jessie Wartz, of Rochester, who will give an exhibition of fancy roller skating at the Lansdowne on Wednesday and Thursday evenings next. Wherever Miss Wartz appears her graceful and wonderful movements are the theme of praise by the press and people. She will appear at the Lansdowne on the evenings of July 29th and 30th.

Our National Game.

The Peterborough Lacrosse Club met last night at the Little Windsor. The principal business discussed was the Civic Holiday programme, which will take place on August 10th, the date for which the merchants signed the recent petition, in consideration of the circus being held here on the 12th. The Shamrocks and Ontario's are going to treat the people of Peterborough to an exhibition of lacrosse, the like of which never took place in town, and no doubt an immense crowd will witness the contest. In the evening there will be held a garden party at the Murray street Separate School grounds. Programmes and posters will appear in a day or two.

Police Court.

This morning at the Police Court Catherine O'Neil made her appearance in the front row, being escorted to that position by P. C. McGinty, who charged her with being drunk last night. She was found guilty, and for the next three months will rusticate up on the hill at the expense of the Queen. Harvey Pearson, the man who assaulted his wife last week in Lakefield, was tried before the Court. Mr. O'Meara appeared for the defendant, who, on the evidence given by Geo. Cochrane and Mrs. Pearson, was committed for trial, but subsequently released on bail.

Powell & Jones Stove Works.

Mr. Archie Moffat, travelling representative of the Powell & Jones Stove Works, returned to town to-day from a business tour in the district served by the Northern and Midland Railways. We are pleased to hear him report that the success he has met with is beyond expectation. While this fact is doubtless due to a considerable extent to the persuasive eloquence of Mr. Moffat on the suoject of stoves, a subject on which he is excellently informed, it is also a gratifying indication of the great success the new enterprise is likely to meet in placing its goods on the market. The buildings for the works are being rapidly pushed and before long the works will be in a position to turn out stoves at a rapid rate.

Worthy of Imitation.

In some of our streets the unrestrained growth of weeds greatly disfigures them. Mr. Wm. Yelland, corner of Bethune and McDonnell streets, has set an example worthy of imitation, by carefully cutting the weeds on both fronts of his lot. Mr. D. Smart, who occupies the adjoining premises, on Bethune street, has fallen in line, and laid his weeds low. The work produces an immense improvement. It is only by combined individual effort of this kind, that our streets can be kept neat and attractive. It is rather too much to ask the council to attend to this work. If every householder will put half an hour's work on the street, the general result will be that the town will present an appearance of tidiness and neatness throughout, which many of its streets now sadly lack.

A Beautiful Medal.

We have been favoured with a sight of the beautiful gold medal presented by the Peterborough Amateur Athletic Association, for competition in the two-mile bicycle race, and which was won last Friday evening by Mr. Kent, of Newcastle. The medal and clasp are of colored gold, and the latter bears the letters "P. A. A. A." The medal itself is an inch and a quarter in diameter, and was furnished by Mr. W. A. Sanderson, jeweller. On the face appears several concentric raised circles of polished gold. Inside the outer one is a border of foliated ornament in relief, and the centre contains the figures of contesting cyclists, excellently engraved, representing the men in the relative positions they occupied at the close of the race. Both medal and clasp are handsome specimens of artistic goldsmith's work, and are a credit to the maker, the Association and the fortunate winner.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29, 1885.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

With to-morrow's issue of the DAILY EXAMINER, Mr. James J. Sheehy withdraws from the position of city editor, which he assumed at the commencement of its publication, having decided to enter upon, a business enterprise, which it would be premature to announce at present. We are sure Mr. Sheehy's many friends will recollect with pleasure that without any previous experience, he entered the field as reporter, and did so remarkably well. We regret losing his services, as he was a most genial person in the relations into which his late position called him. We shall look for his future prosperity with pleasure.

We also announce with satisfaction that Mr. T. J. C. Emerson, one of the city editors of the Toronto Globe, has accepted the position, and will enter upon his duties on Friday. Mr. Emerson has for some years been connected with the Globe, and has made a reputation for himself which we confidently expect to see sustained in his future relations with THE EXAMINER. We believe Mr. Emerson possesses all the qualifications of a first-class short hand reporter, and we are sure those coming in contact with him will find him to be gentlemanly and genial. We ask for him a courteous reception from the public of Peterborough.

Young Men's Reform Club.

The Work of Organization in Peterborough Begun.

On Tuesday evening there was a fairly attended and excellently representative meeting of young Liberals in Mr. E. W. Cox's office in the Cox block. Considering the season the attendance was much larger than could have been expected and the greatest interest and enthusiasm was manifested in the proposed organization. After some time had been spent in discussing the present condition of the affairs of the Dominion and the necessity of making vigorous efforts to oppose the flood of extravagance and corruption that threatens to overflow the land, the organization of the club was decided upon.

The several committees necessary to bring about the organization of the club, were filled with men who will spare no effort to bring in satisfactory reports to the next meeting to be held on August 24th, when the draft of a constitution and by-laws to govern the club will be presented for adoption, and the club will be formally organized. From the spirit shown at the preliminary meeting, we have no doubt that a strong club with a vigorous and zealous membership will be formed, and that in the early fall the Young Men's Reform Club, of Peterborough will be ready to enter upon and prosecute energetically the work of extending the principles of Reform and good and honest government, without which the country is rapidly drifting to financial ruin.

Personal.

Rev. J. Campbell and Mrs. Campbell, of Listowell, are in town visiting friends.

Mr. Hubert Carver, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Walsh and Mrs. John Chambers, returned to Ontario to-day from the Northwest, and are visiting friends.

English Political Affairs.

Gladstone Expects Support From the Newly Enfranchised Electors.

LONDON, July 28.—The Irish land purchase bill will be dropped for the present session of Parliament, as there is no time to discuss it.

Gladstone expresses his confident belief that the newly enfranchised electors will show their preference for liberal men and liberal measures. He looks forward with assured confidence to the result of the general elections.

In the house of commons last evening, Mr. Smith, secretary of war, announced the government's decision to grant funds for the volunteer defence of the Tyne, Mersey, Clyde and Severn rivers. Oakley complained of the absence of defence at the commercial ports. The government promised to take the matter into careful consideration.

It is expected that the Egyptian loan will be placed at three per cent.

RETURNED.

Willie Scrimgeour, Color Sergt., Co'y. E, Midland Battalion, returned home on Saturday all safe and well tanned up, and received a hearty welcome from his many friends.

THE DRAIN.

FOR CAMPERS.

As many of your readers may be up camping and as some may suffer from the effects of poison ivy, I would advise such to try slacked lime made into a thin paste with water spread over the parts, it will give instant relief and effect a cure in 48 hours. Apply it fresh 2 or 3 times a day.

FINISHED.

The new cut stone tower of St. John's church has been completed and adds much to the appearance of the church, the bell has been placed in the new tower and can now be heard for several miles round the village.

MOUNT JULIAN.

Camping parties up Stony Lake cannot do better than drop in on Mr. Bertrand at Mount Julian, as they will find him the most obliging landlord that has been there for many a year, for besides good meals and beds, he will let them have all kinds of camp supplies, such as butter, eggs, milk, vegetables, and at prices which will not convey the idea that they are being swindled, which is too often the case at our summer resorts.

The barn of Mr. Geo. I. Thomas was burned on Tuesday morning. The loss is a serious one to Mr. Thomas. In the barn was his entire stock of fancy poultry, for the breeding of which he has a more than provincial reputation. One game bird alone was valued at $400. Besides the poultry, he lost three good dogs, a waggon, sleigh, harness and the fixtures of his slaughter house, and his supply of ice. His total loss is not less than $1,500. The barn and outhouses were insured for $475 and the contents of the barn for $490.

Sir. Leonard Tilley.

Sir Leonard Tilley is greatly troubled over the restrictive diet prescribed by his medical attendants. He is forbidden to eat any fruit—of which class of diet he is passionately fond—because of its containing more or less saccharine matter; and sugar is a precipitant of the disease which afflicts him. Sir Leonard's condition is regarded as serious by all his personal friends and colleagues. Sir John Macdonald had a two hour's interview with Sir Leonard Tilley on the afternoon of his departure for the sea-side, and it is said the Premier was painfully impressed with the marked change for the worse in his political ally.

England's Enemies.

England's enemies seem to be melting away. The Mahdi is dead, or at least officially declared to be, and his forces are defeated before Kassala. And now Said, the unfriendly Grand Vizier of Turkey, has been struck down by apoplexy. The English Government promises to take steps to relieve Kassala, which is the most remote of the garrisons beleaguered by the false prophet. By what sort of an expedition this is to be done we are not told, whether through Abyssinia, through the new Italian port of Massowa, or via Saukim, or up the Nile, as before. Osman Digma is presumably the Mahdi's real successor, and it remains to be seen to what extent he is able to keep the Arabs together. It would seem to be good policy for England to wait awhile and see how he and the late Mahdi's lieutenant, Khalifa Abdoola, and the new Mahdi dispose of each other.

"El Padre" Cigars.

Universally acknowledged to be the finest 10c. cigar manufactured. Don't be persuaded to take other brands. No chemicals or artificial flavourings used. 13d-25w-1y

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w-1y

Reil's Trial Resumed.

Mr. Osler States the Case for the Crown.

REGINA, N. W. T., July 28.—The trial of Louis Riel was resumed at 10 o'clock this morning. Mr. Osler presented the case for the crown. He said if the plea of naturalization in the United States were put in, the prisoner would be tried under the provisions of the Fenian act for treason-felony, but it was deemed advisable to have his case heard under the treason statute of Edward III., which has formed the law of treason till the present. He then said he would prove by witnesses that Riel ordered and succeeded in bringing together, on March 3, an armed assembly; he would prove that Riel was at the head of the rebellion and was instrumental [illegible] the following letter found in the council house at Batoche:

SAINT ANTOINE, N. W. T., March 21, 1885.

To Major Crozier, commanding the mounted police at Fort Carleton and Battleford.

MAJOR:—The council of the provisional government for Prince Albert settlement have the honor to communicate to you and your men the following conditions:—You will be requested to give up completely the situations which the Canadian Government have placed you in at Fort Carleton and Battleford, together with all property. If you agree you and your men will be allowed to leave the country and be provided with teams to send you to Qu'Appelle. In case of non-acceptance we intend to attack you after Lord's day.

When Mr. Osler was ready to present the above document Riel sprang to his feet, and leaning his neck over the box, surveyed with rage and indignation his production.

Dr. Willoughby, of Saskatoon, testified that Riel admitted to him that the rebellion at the time of the troubles at Fort Garry was nothing to what was about to take place. He referred to the projects of Riel, who stated his intention of apportioning the Northwest Territory into seven districts in order to divide it amongst the Poles, Germans, Bavarians and Swedes, and also his intention of forming a new Ireland.

Fishing With Dynamite.

In England the use—or rather the abuse—of dynamite at sea preceded its abuse on land; and several years before the worshipers at the shrine of O'Donovan Rossa had forced the English parliament to prohibit the clandestine manufacture and possession of explosive, an act had been passed forbidding the use of dynamite as a "mode of fishing." In Spain, on the contrary, the idea of blowing up fish appears to have dawned upon the people as a development of the practice of exploding bombs in the public streets. At any rate, the "employment of dynamite in fishing operations," to adopt the euphemism of the Spanish government, has become so general off the coast of the Iberian peninsula that a law is about to be passed to put an end to it. Whether the food supply of the sea is "inexhaustible" or not, the use of dynamite is most certainly not a legitimate mode of fishing. The explosion absolutely destroys more fish than it enables the fishermen to secure, while those that are captured are rendered unfit for food. In the evidence given before the commissioners, appointed to inquire into this practice in England, six or seven years ago, it was stated that the fish in the immediate neighborhood are so shattered and bruised by the violence of the shock that they are rendered flavorless and rapidly putrify; while those further away have their air-bladders broken, and struggle away to die a lingering death. In the case of gregarious fish like the mackerel and herring, the effect of an explosion is to break up the shoal and effectually drive the fish off the coast. A few days of unrestricted "dynamiting" may spoil the fishing for weeks afterward.—St. James's Gazette.

A doctor, writing to a New York paper, deprecates the publishing by the press of cases of hydrophobia, as, he said, in nine cases out of ten the fear of the disease brought it on.

A remarkable fact is that while steel will melt in heat that does not affect platinum, if lead be put in the crucible with the latter metal both will melt at the low temperature at which lead liquefies. Fire clay will melt before platinum, and yet lead cannot be melted in a platinum crucible, for as long as the lead melts the platinum with which it comes in contact melts also and the crucible is destroyed.

The Volume Had Come.

A New Yorker who was up in the hill country a week or so ago shooting rabbits had occasion to call at a country store for some shot.

"Yes, I've got powder," replied the little old man behind the counter. "How much did ye want?"

"I'll take a pound."

"What, a hull pound?"

"Yes, sir."

The merchant came from behind his counter, slowly adjusted his steel-bowed spectacles, and for a long minute looked the New Yorker over as one might read a circus bill. Finally he said:

"A hull pound, and you are going to pay cash down?"

Yes, sir.

"Well—um—well! Mister, for the last fifteen years I've been contending that the volume of floating currency was not large enough to do the business of the country, and I never expected to live to see this day. Cash down for a hull pound of powder! Wait a minute till I go to the back door and whoop."—Wall Street News.

Hot Weather Precautions.

Now that the hot weather has set in, and it is time for the reappearance of that large class of amiable people who can never meet without telling you frankly "what one ought to do," it may not be of out place to quote the "regulations" which were published by the Moniteur de l' Armee as official advice to French troops going to Canton in 1859. The Times gives the following translation of them, which I have come upon accidentally; the rules are certainly amusing, and seem just as applicable to America as Asia.

1. Have warm clothing in winter.
2. Never remain in damp or wet clothes, unless you are at work.
3. In summer wear light clothing of soft wool. Be careful to wash this clothing when it is soaked with perspiration.
4. Wear flannel both as a waistcoat and round the abdomen. Never leave it off.
5. Never sleep on the bare ground. Put a plank under your feet when you stand still.
6. In summer put a little straw upon your plank.
7. Never drink water, always tea.
8. Clarify your water when muddy with rock alum.
9. Drink in moderation the spirits of the country, taking care to warm them first.
10. Eat moderately.
11. Never eat ducks.
12. Eat but sparingly of sweets and fruits. The sugar-cane is almost the only wholesome sweet thing. All others are either too heating or set cold on the stomach.
13. As soon as you arrive in the country, acquire the habit of eating rice as the natives cook it.
14. When you smoke, spit as little as possible.
15. At night take care to cover your head well, and more particularly your eyes.
16. In hot weather avoid cold places; draughts are always dangerous.
17. In spring and autumn take care never to get wet-footed in the morning.
18. Never take a nap in the day time.

Not bad advice on the whole, and worth following at the present time, when we are on the eve of the Coney Island season, the fall campaign, and other risky experiments.—Cor. N. Y. Post.

A Russian Wedding Feast.

The banquet is ordered at some fashionable confectioner's. Nothing is wanting—silver, crystal, flowers and lustres laden with candles of the purest wax. The young married pair occupy seats about the middle of the table, their parents supporting them on both sides, the rest of the company taking seats according to the degree of the relationship or rank. If they want a grand dinner they order a "general's" dinner, which costs $30 more than an ordinary one. At this dinner, so ordered, the master of ceremonies invites a real old pensioned off general, who is received with all the reverence due to his rank and seated in the place of honor. He is the first to drink to the health of the young couple, and is always helped before anyone else. He never speaks unless it is absolutely necessary. He is only there for show and does his best in return for the $20 paid him. He never refuses a single dish of the thirty or more served on such occasions. As the last roast disappears, the champagne corks fly, the glasses are filled to the brim, the music strikes up, and hussas resound from all parts. But here comes the bride's father, glass in hand, going up to her bowing and making a most woeful face, saying that his wine is so bitter that he cannot drink it until she has sweetened it. After a great deal of pressing she arises and gives her husband a kiss; her father still pretends that his wine is bitter, and it remains so until she has given her husband three kisses; each kiss not only sweetens his wine, but is accompanied by roars of laughter and bursts of applause. After the dinner comes the ball and the "general's walk." They lead him through all the rooms every half hour; everybody salutes him as he passes along, and he graciously replies by an inclination of his head. At last, at 3 o'clock in the morning, all the young girls and those who dressed the bride take her away to undress her and put her to rest; the men do the same by the husband. The next morning the house of the newly married couple is again filled with the crowds of the evening before. The young wife is seated in a drawing-room on a sofa with a splendid tea service before her. One after the other approaches her and salutes her. She then offers tea, coffee or chocolate, according to the taste of the visitor. She is enthroned for the first time in all splendor as the mistress of the house. The most intimate friends remain to spend the day with the young pair.—Brooklyn Eagle.

GENEROUS REFORMERS.

Naturally a great deal of indignation was felt because the members of Parliament at at the close of the session, voted themselves $500 of extra sessional indemnity. It was of no use for the Opposition members to protest, but some of them were too honorable to apply the amount to personal uses. Mr. Wm. Malock, M. P. for West York, generously donated the $500 he received to the York volunteers. And now Hon. Edward Blake has shown his disinterested interest in his constituency, West Durham, by devoting his extra sessional allowance to the promotion of the agricultural interests of his constituents. Hon. Mr. Blake has forwarded to F. F. McArthur, Esq., President of the West Durham Reform Association, the cheque for $500, which he received for extra sessional allowance at the close of the recent session, with the request that it be handed to the Trustees of the County Agricultural Society for investment, and that the interest be used each year for prizes as the Board shall direct. This generous act is highly appreciated by the honorable gentleman's agricultural constituents, and now we anxiously wait to hear from some of the self-sacrificing supporters of the Government.

THERE MUST BE A CHANGE.

Everybody knows that the incompetence and carlessness of Sir David Macpherson, late Minister of the Interior in the Dominion Government, did much to bring on and precipitate the Northwest rising. So deeply did he feel his guilt in the matter, so anxious were the Government to avoid the revelations which Sir David might have to make as a witness in the trial of Riel that he was packed off to Europe to be out of the way. The opponents of the present Government are not the only ones that complain of the iniquitous maladministration that has characterized, not only the Department of the Interior, but the Indian Department. Hide-bound Tories begin to tire of making excuses for the Government, and even a thorough-paced Government organ like the Moutreal Herald roundly denounces the Goverament in this connection. Mr. Peter Mitchel's paper warns the Government to be careful in selecting the new Minister of the Interior, and then adds :—"The war is over in the Northwest and the days of plain speaking have returned. We wish now to warn the Government in regard to its management of the Interior. Unless a radical change be made here before Parliament will have assembled there will be such an indictment against the Department prepared as will shake the very foundations of the Government." This will not be much of a calamity to the country. Unless the foundations of the present Government are shaken, before long the country will hardly be worth governing. If the people could be brought to realize the terrible pass, the present government on bringing Canada to ! The public debt has now reached the enormous and alarming total of three hundred million dollars, a sum of about $75 per head for every man, woman and child in the land, and the annual expenditure has increased under the present government to nearly forty millions per year ! Let the people think of these things. Let them reflect and attempt to decide how long this state of things can continue. How long can Canada stand this enormous drain upon her resources ? So long as the present government remains in power, so long will the present wanton waste and extravagance continue. We have hoped against hope for some improvement but instead of the government learning economy, they are becoming more expert in devising new schemes for wasting the peoples' money. The only salvation for the country is the removal of the present cabal of incompetency and corrupt extravagance that holds office at Ottawa. A radical and complete change is urgently demanded.

The rumour is received that Mr. Speaker Kirkpatrick will be appointed Minister of Interior. He is at present staying at Kingston, to which place his personal effects have been moved from the Speaker's official residence.

Funeral Sermon.

In Memory of the Late Mrs. John Hall.

At a union service, held in the Lakefield Methodist Church last Sunday, the following funeral sermon of the late Mrs. John Hall was preached by Rev. A. E. De St. Dalmas, Rev. Mr. McFarlane being present during the services.

He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.—Hebrews, XIII., 5.

What contrasts manifest themselves in individuals, and often even in children of the same family. How strikingly is the difference brought out in the lives of Esau and Jacob—Esau for one morsel of meat (or for a single meal) sold his birthright, but Jacob valued it and his father's blessing. As soon as Jacob had received the birthright and his father's blessing, in obedience to his parents, he left his home to go to Padan-aram. You all remember the wonderful experience he had the first night—a lone weary traveller, a stone for his pillow, the grass for his bed, the clouds for his tent. His sleep was peaceful, and his dreams pleasant, for not only were the guardian angels watching over him as heaven and earth were united, and the angels ascending and descending upon the phantom ladder, but God's voice was also heard speaking comfort to the weary pilgrim-stranger. But glorious as was his vision at Bethel, nothing could have given the solitary traveller greater comfort in all his journeys, accompanied by difficulties and dangers, than the promise contained in our text, and this God gave him there, for He said, "Behold I am with thee, * * * for I will not leave thee." (Gen. xxviii., 13—15.)

Poor, fickle Israel ! what varied experiences were hers. At first highly favored in Egypt, but soon in bondage, groaning under the lash of the task-master. In this affliction they cried unto God. He heard them, and, after showing in the sight of all the Egyptians His signs and wonders, He brought them out of their trouble and destroyed Pharaoh and all his hosts in the Red Sea. Notwithstanding, He gave them the most faithful leader that any people in the world ever had, and although He wrought such great deliverances for them, yet they were filled with unbelief, and murmured against their Divine, as well as human, leader. At last their forty years wilderness journey is ended, and they are but alas ! Moses cannot go with them, for God is about to take him to himself. Poor Israel ! What will she do without such a tried, proved and faithful leader as Moses ? What could be of more comfort to her in that dark hour than the words of our text ? Listen to the eloquence of the aged leader as he gives the people—for whom he had lived, and who were even dearer to him than life itself—his farewell charge. "And he said unto them, I am an hundred and twenty years old this day ; I can no more go out and come in ; also the Lord hath said unto me, Thou shalt not go over this Jordan !" Thus after promising them another leader, even Joshua and victory over all the inhabitants of the land, he concluded his charge with the promise contained in the text, saying, "Be strong, and of a good courage, fear not nor be afraid of them, for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee ; he will not fail thee nor forsake thee." Deut. xxxi 2-6. One of the most wonderful men that ever lived was Moses ; born in a house of bondage, brought up in palace walls, cradled in the faith and knowledge of the Lord God of Israel, but educated in all the arts of heathen Egypt, and accepts the lot of Israel's bondage in preference to becoming an Egyptian prince. After spending forty years as an exile, keeping a flock of sheep for Jethro, he receives a divine call to be the leader of Israel from Egypt to the Land of Promise. With unwavering faith in God and devotion to Israel, he leads over two million (2,000,000) undisciplined, unorganized people through flood and desert. Forty years was he their leader and chief judge, and he gave them a law which has been the

BASIS OF ALL EQUITABLE LAW

since. Just when Israel had learned to truly value Moses, and to put implicit confidence in him ; just when Israel was about to take possession of the "Promised Land," exterminating the inhabitants thereof ; at this, one of their most critical hours, when they needed Moses so much, then Moses, the leader and law giver of Israel, and prophet of Jehovah, dies. The burden and responsibility so long borne by Moses was in this dark hour laid upon the true and faithful Joshua. What could have given him confidence to accept so great responsibilities, to go over Jordon and conquer the land by driving out nations greater and mightier than Israel, what, but the words of our text ? And they were given, for Moses ere he departed was permitted to give him the

of a covenant-keeping God, saying "The Lord, He it is that doth go before thee ; He will be with thee ; He will not fail thee, neither forsake thee," (Duet. 31, 8,) And then, as if to confirm the promise, the Lord Himself repeated it to Joshua, after the decease of Moses, declaring "as I was with Moses so will I be with thee ; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee."—(Joshua 1. 5.)

Over fourteen centuries have passed away, but "the word of God liveth and abideth forever," and it being true that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation," the inspired writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, reiterates the old, oft-repeated and ever precious promise. For nearly two years one well known to all present, and known only to be loved by one and all, rich and poor, was laid aside from active life, and spent months of weariness upon her bed. She was at times harassed by the evil one, "who goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." What, under circumstances like these, could give her comfort and assurance, but the promise in our text ? And it did. Although 18 additional long centuries have passed since the hand that penned the Epistle to the Hebrews returned to the dust, yet nothing seemed to give our departed sister such solid peace as our text. On different occasions, during and after her religious difficulties, she repeated to me, "He hath said,

I WILL NEVER LEAVE THEE

nor forsake thee." How comforting to one with an experience like hers, are the following lines :—

Count him as one most truly blest
Across whose faith, whose perfect rest
In the all Father's love and care,
No shadow falls, no cloud of doubt
Rests for a time God's daybreak out,
But all is peace and sunshine fair.

But count him as most blest of all,
Who, shrouded round by doubt's dark pall,
Looks upward to the starless night,
Fighting his way through grief, through pain,
With feet courageous, to the plain
Of clearer vision, purer light.

It is not my intention to preach about the deceased, or to dwell upon her many well-known virtues, neither did she wish it, for she said :—"Don't preach about me, but preach to the people about Jesus." But a few facts and an expression of condolence will be in place, before passing to the consideration of a few thoughts suggested by our text.

Our departed sister was born in Clarence in 1844, and was born again at the age of sixteen, when she came to Jesus as she was, and He, true to His promise, pardoned her sins, and adopted her into His family. Not wishing to keep the new-found peace a secret, she soon afterwards

CONFESSED CHRIST IN BAPTISM.

At the age of nineteen she left her childhood home, the happy bride of our bereaved brother, Mr. Hull. During her stay of 23 years in Lakefield she won many friends, who now mourn her loss and sympathize with the partner of her life, her widowed mother, and her brothers and sisters. May the promise so dear to our absent sister graciously sustain the sorrowing friends when battling with the trials and difficulties of life, or laid aside on beds of suffering, and may it in the hour of death still comfort them.

In considering this portion of Divine truth we will ask : (1st) Who hath spoken ? (2nd) What hath He said ? (3rd) Why hath He spoken ?

First : Who hath spoken ? and the answer is, He who is faithful, unchangeable and eternal.

Many of us know the value of a faithful friend, especially in the present time, when so many prove untrue, one in whom we can confide and rest assured that, as far as in them lies, they will not betray the trust and confidence reposed in them. But what earthly being can be for a moment compared to him whose promise sustained Jacob, Israel and Joshua. On studying the word of God and [illegible] we behold with gratitude and adoration, the same faithfulness at all times and under all circumstances. Sometimes we hear persons complain that they cannot trust their fellow beings, and they have lost confidence, not only in the man of the world, but also, unfortunately, in professing Christians. To such, we say, look above, there is yet one who cannot be charged with lack of faithfulness.

TRUST IN HIM, SERVE HIM, and so live that the charge of unfaithfulness can never be brought against you.

What poor changeable creatures we are ! Sometimes our love seems boundless, our faith strong, and our devotion intense ; but alas, again, at other times we question whether we have any love or faith, and our devotion does not manifest itself, or it appears only formal. Our circumstances and conditions changing may perhaps account for many of our changes. The one who was our friend in the hour of prosperity leaves us in the darkness of adversity, but cheer up, fellow Christians, there is is one who says, "I am the Lord, I change not."

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
I will not, I will not desert to its foes ;
That soul though all hell should endeavour to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never, forsake !"

I hope many of us have friends or know those in whom we place implicit confidence ; that we are not one of those dyspeptic ones who have lost all faith in man. But admitting that they will prove faithful and unchangeable, and worthy of all the confidence that can be reposed in them, they are but mortal and just when we need them they are taken from us. What if we do succeed in having constant friends as long as we live, we must remember death and the judgment, and if the Eternal One is not ours who will be with us in our most trying times ?

Second, What hath He said ? I, who am loving, merciful and omnipotent "will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

We all know something of the power and influence of human love, and if we know it surely we must appreciate it ; for having once of another, let that one be a father or a mother, a brother or a sister ; we not only desire its continuance, but also its growing intensity. This being true of the human or finite love, must it not likewise be true of the divine or infinite love. Therefore, if we value the love of a human companion, how much more should we prize the love of Him who is love itself. Oh ! what a wonderful thought that He who is infinite love said : "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," so that we can join Paul in triumphantly asking : "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ ?"

Further, our condition in this life may be such that we neither receive nor desire mercy from any human being, all that we ask from any is justice. It is, then, possible for us to be largely dependent upon human love for our happiness here, without needing the mercy of any ; but who can be independent of the mercy of God ? Where there is no stain or fruit of sin, there, and there only, is there no need of God's mercy ; but we have all sinned and come short of the glory of God. We all need to offer the publican's prayer, "God be merciful to me a sinner." Bearing in mind our daily sinfulness, and consequently our daily need of God's mercy, how precious it is to know that He who is "slow to anger and of great mercy," hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Again, our condition may be different from that which I have already indicated. We may be oppressed unjustly by our fellow being, and unable to cope with our enemy, or we may be guilty and suffer justly. In either case we might desire human mercy, and our friends might pity us, but have no power to relieve us. How then we turn to and rest upon the precious promise of Him who hath "all power in heaven and in earth," and who hath said : "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Third. Why hath he spoken ? It is that we may be FILLED WITH COMFORT, CONFIDENCE AND COURAGE.

O ! weary and disconsolate one, filled with doubts, surrounded by temptations, and burdened with care, our text is full of comfort for you. The one who hath said, "All things work together for good to them that love God," hath also said, "I will never turn thee nor forsake him."

Fellow traveller, do you mourn your sinfulness, or question God's acceptance of you ? Remember "He is merciful" and His blood cleanseth from all sin, and his promise is not only, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out," but also "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Surely this should be sufficient to give you confidence. My Christian friends, we are called upon to be soldiers, it is ours to fight, and surely the thought that our Captain "will never leave us nor forsake us" should fill us with courage, to endure the hardships, and face the foe, knowing that He will at last bring us off "more than conquerors."

How I wish that the words of our text applied to all within the sound of my voice. My unsaved friend, it is not for you ; you cannot claim it, not because of your sinfulness, but because you have not trusted in Christ ; you have not taken him as your companion and leader. The world and worldly thoughts are absorbing your time and desires. O, remember

Health may fail and wealth may fly you,
Pleasures cease to satisfy you ;
Almost everything that brings
Happiness is born with wings.

Then what wilt thou do in the dying hour and in the day of judgment without the ever present one to be your friend and intercessor ? Therefore, before it is eternally too late, choose ye this day whom ye will serve.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-28w

Chapter III—Continued.

Kenyon did not propose to follow the steps of the first couple, and I, even had I wished to do so, was ashamed to suggest such a thing. Still, I am afraid that a resolution as to visiting San Giovanni again to-morrow was forming in my mind.

But I saw her no more. How many times I went to that church I dare not say. Neither the fair girl nor her attendant crossed my path again whilst in Turin. We met our impertinent friend several times in the streets, and were honored by a dark scowl which passed unnoticed; but of that sweet girl with the pale face and strange dark eyes we caught no glimpse.

It would be absurd to say I had fallen in love with a woman I had seen only for a few minutes—to whom I had never spoken—whose name and abode were unknown to me; but I must confess that so far as looks went, I was more interested in this girl than in any one I had ever seen. Beautiful as she was, I could scarcely say why I felt this attraction or fascination. I had met many, many beautiful women. Yet for the slender chance of seeing this one again I lingered on in Turin until Kenyon—my good-tempered friend's patience was quite exhausted—until he declared, that unless I quitted it at once, he would go away alone. At last I gave in. Ten days had passed by without the chance encounter I was waiting for. We folded up our tents and started for fresh scenes.

From Turin we went southward—to Genoa, Florence, Rome and Naples, and other minor places; then we went across to Sicily, and at Palermo, according to arrangement, were received on board a yacht belonging to another friend. We had taken our journey easily; staying as long as it suited us in each town we visited, so that by the time the yacht had finished her cruise and borne us back to England, the summer was nearly over.

Many and many a time since leaving Turin I had thought of the girl I had seen at San Giovanni—thought of her so often that I laughed at myself for my folly. Until now I had never carried in my mind for so long a period the remembrance of a woman's face. There must, for me, have been something strangely bewitching in her style of beauty. I recalled every feature—I could, had I been an artist, have painted her portrait from memory. Laugh at my folly as I would, I could not conceal from myself that short as the time was during which I had seen her, the impression made upon me was growing stronger each day, instead of fainter. I blamed myself for leaving Turin before I had met her again—even if for that purpose it had been necessary to linger there for months. My feeling was that by quitting the place I had lost a chance which comes to a man but once in a lifetime.

Kenyon and I parted in London. He was going to Scotland after grouse, I had not yet quite settled my autumn plans, so resolved to stay, at any rate for a few days, in town.

Was it chance or was it fate? The first morning after my arrival in London, business led me to Regent street. I was walking slowly down the broad thoroughfare, but my thoughts were far away. I was trying to argue away an insane longing which was in my mind—a longing to return at once to Turin. I was thinking of the dim church and the fair young face I saw three months ago. Then, as in my mind's eye I saw that girl and her old attendant in church, I looked up and here in the heart of London they stood before me!

Amazed as I was, no thought of being mistaken entered my head. Unless it was a dream or an illusion, there came the one I had been thinking of so often; walking toward me, with the old woman at her side. They might have just stepped out of San Giovanni. There was a little change in the appearance of the old woman; she was dressed more like an English servant; but the girl was the same. More beautiful than ever, I thought, as my heart gave a great leap. They passed me; I turned impulsively and followed them with my eyes.

Yes, it was my fate! Now I had found her in this unexpected manner I would take care not to lose sight of her again. I attempted to disguise my feelings no longer. The emotion which had thrilled me as I stood once more face to face with her told me the truth. I was in love—deeply in love. Twice, only twice I had seen her, but that was enough to convince me that if my lot was ever linked with another's, it must be with this woman's, whose name, home or country, I knew not.

There was only one thing I could now do. I must follow the two women. So, for the next hour or more, wherever they went, at a respectful distance, I followed. I waited whilst they entered one or two shops, and when their walk was resumed discreetly dogged their steps. I kept so far in the rear that my pursuit was bound to be unnoticed and could cause no annoyance. They soon turned out of Regent street and walked on until they came to one of those many rows of houses in Maida vale. I marked the house they entered, and as I passed by it, a few minutes afterward, saw in the front window the girl arranging a few flowers in a vase. It was evident I had ascertained her abode.

It was fate! I was in love and could only act as my passion impelled me. I must find out all about this unknown, I must make her acquaintance and so obtain the right of looking into those strange but beautiful eyes. I must hear her speak. I laughed again at the absurdity of being in love with a woman whose voice I had never heard, whose native language was a matter of uncertainty. But then, love is full of absurdities. When once he gets the whip hand he drives us in strange ways.

I formed a bold resolve. I retraced my steps and walked up to the house. The door was opened by a tidy-looking servant.

"Have you any rooms to let?" I asked; having jumped at the conclusion that the unknown was only lodging at the house.

The servant replied in the affirmative, and upon my expressing a wish to see the vacant rooms I was shown a dining-room and bedroom on the ground floor.

Had these rooms been dungeons instead of airy cheerful apartments—had they been empty and bare instead of comfortably furnished—had the rent been fifty pounds a week instead of the moderate sum asked, I should have engaged them. I was very easy to deal with. The landlady was summoned and the bargain struck at once. If that good person had known the state of my mind she might have reaped a golden harvest from her ground floor apartments. As it was, the only thing she was exacting in was in the matter of references. I named several, then I paid a month's rent in advance and received her permission, as I had just returned to England and wanted a home at once, to enter into possession that very evening.

"By the by," I said carelessly, as I left the house to get my luggage, "I forgot to ask you if you have other lodgers—no children, I hope?"

"No, sir—only a lady and her servant. They are on the first floor—very quiet people."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The city of Hamburg is about to erect a museum of natural history at an estimated cost of 900,000 marks. Plans in competition have been solicited from architects, and upward of 100 are likely to be received.

Speaking of names, one of the "characters" of Providence, R. I., is an aged negro of diminutive stature, who is happy in the possession of the name of Glorius Valorious George Washington Peck Hamilton Stout.—New York Tribune.

The country bedbug is now trying samples of all the different drummers that come through his territory. The difference between a drummer and a bed bug is that the latter shows his samples and the latter don't. The latter, when he has sampled a good fat traveling man, hurries off to a convenient crack and lays low.

There are all sorts of clocks, but a new invention is badly needed. It is one that instead of striking at 11 p. m., will pick up a dilatory lover and fire him out of the front door. A clock of this description would make a fortune for the inventor, as there are probably a million American fathers who would buy one.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

"No sir," said old Tostewater, "there is good in every man." "Yes," said Lawyer Greenbag; "there was Jim Slanger; he drank, stole, swore, lied and followed a bad life for years, and yet when we arrested him the other day——" Here Tostewater interrupted: "You told him of his old mother; of his once happy home. You found some redeeming thing about him!" "We did," said Greenbag, as expectant eyes were fixed upon him; "we found something redeeming about him—it was a pawnticket."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

A young attorney of this city has for a client a lady who resides on L. street, and is possessed of considerable real estate. A few days since she called at the office of her attorney and informed him that she desired to secure the services of Judge "Dennison" to assist in certain litigation. The young attorney objected; said she could hire the services of Judge "Dennison" as advisory counsel, but he would not give up the management of the case. "However," he remarked, "if you do not think I have ability enough to prosecute the case I will step to one side, and you can employ Judge 'Dennison.'" "La me," she replied, "I have every confidence in your ability; I was only afraid you did not know enough."—Sacramento (Cal.) Union.

A gentleman in a street-car, while reading a newspaper, discovered a paragraph which struck him as particularly funny. "Here is something good," he said to his neighbor, and read the item to him. A tired look swept over the gentleman's face, but he never smiled. Presently the reader came across another paragraph that tickled his fancy. "I will try him with this one," he said. He did so, and a tear actually welled out of his neighbor's eye and coursed slowly down his cheek. "Heavens, man!" was the exclamation, "what's the matter with you? have you no sense of humor? What do you do to pass away the time, anyway?" Looking mournfully out of the window the stranger replied: "I am a proof-reader on a comic weekly."—Philadelphia Call.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Excursionists in Town.

The C. P. R. train from the west to-day brought about three hundred excursionists into town. The party comes from Claremont, a handsome little village, about four hundred strong, in Ontario county, and is accompanied by a brass band of eight pieces.

The Wallace Point Bridge.

At the meeting yesterday of the joint committee of the Counties of Northumberland, Durham and Peterborough with reference to the Wallace Point bridge the tender of Mr. W. H. Law, of the Central Iron Works, to build the iron portion of the bridge for the sum of $2,300 was accepted The stone work was also tendered for and was awarded to Mr. Charles Wynn, another local contractor. Among the tenders received for the iron work of the superstructure of the bridge were those of the Dominion Bridge Company of Montreal, and the Hamilton Bridge Company of Hamilton, Ont.

The Most Beautiful Bouquet.

The decoration ceremonies held in Lindsay yesterday attracted, as would be expected, a large number to the cemetery in that place. The bouquets prepared by Mr. A. Blade, of Mr. G. M. Rogers garden, Peterborough, were acknowledged to be the most beautiful of any used on the occasion. In fact they were so conspicuously superior to any of the others, that the bearers, Messrs. W. Howden and R. Hamilton, were assigned the first positions in the procession. These gentlemen felt highly complimented, the handsome bouquets being much admired by the Lindsay people.

A Lady Roller Skater.

The manager of the Lansdowne Roller Rink seems bound to keep up the attractions. Star after star is engaged for the delectation of its patrons. The latest attraction is the Star of America, the champion lady roller skater, Miss Jessie Wartz, of Rochester, who will give an exhibition of fancy roller skating at the Lansdowne on Wednesday and Thursday evenings next. Wherever Miss Wartz appears her graceful and wonderful movements are the theme of praise by the press and people. She will appear at the Lansdowne on the evenings of July 29th and 30th.

More Telephone Facilities.

The Bell Company is still pushing on with its new lines at the rate of about thirty miles a day, and has completed within the last few days the line from Trenton to Picton, taking in also Bloomfield, Wellington and the Lake Shore Hotel at West Point. Welland has been connected with Thorold and St. Catharines, and the line is now being rapidly finished to Hamilton. Buffalo, Port Colborne, Niagara Falls, and other connections in that neighborhood will also be complete in a few weeks; Montreal will be in communication with Kingston and all towns on the way in a few days, and several other lines are in course of construction.

Farwell Amenities.

On Sunday last the children of the Convent, as well as the young ladies of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, assembled at that institution to say good-bye to Sister St. Mary of Loretto, who has occupied the position of Lady Superior of the Peterborough branch of the Notre Dame Convent for the past five years. An address was read by Miss Annie Delaney, on behalf of the young ladies of the above mentioned society, and contained strong expressions of the appreciation of the valuable services which have been given by the good lady for that term; as well as sentiments of regret at her departure and prayers and wishes for her future happiness. The same young lady presented the departing sister with a beautiful watch, on behalf of the society. Previous to her departure, which took place on Tuesday morning, a large number of lady citizens called to pay their respects and say good-bye.

Lindsay's Decoration Day.

Floral Tribute of Oddfellows.

The Oddfellows of Lindsay held their first decoration ceremony on Tuesday, the 28th inst., when the beautiful custom of decorating the graves of deceased brethren of the Society, now so well known to the people of Peterborough, was joined in by about 100 members, including visitors from the surrounding lodges. At 3 p. m. the procession, headed by the Citizen's Band, started from the O. F. Hall, near the market, marching down Kent street to the Riverside Cemetery. During the time the procession was passing down the main street most of the places of business were closed. The turnout and general appearance of the society was very respectable indeed, marshalled by Brother (Lieut.) Graham, who conducted the proceedings in a very creditable manner.

The following are the principal officers who performed the ceremonies at the graves. Brother J. Nugent, N. G., and Bros. F. C. Taylor, Chap.; A. Higginbotham, Secretary. These officers deserve great credit for the excellent style and manner in which they delivered their respective charges, especially the polished and finished oratory of the N. G. (Mr. Nugent).

The graves of the deceased brethren decorated were Brothers Thomas Nesbit, E. M. Woolhouse, J. P. Sutherland and John G. White.

On the return to the lodge room, the Lindsay lodge passed votes of thanks to the visiting members for their attendance, which were briefly acknowledged by representative brethren present, namely:—Brother G. B. Sproule, N. G. of Otonabee Lodge No. 13; Bro. Dr. Clarke, N. G., and Bro. Hall, of the Peterborough Lodge, No. 111, Peterborough; Bro. J. McGee, N. G., and Henry White, P. G., Durham Lodge, No. 78, Port Hope, and Bro. P. McSweyn, of Cicerone Lodge, Woodville. Some regret was expressed that the people of Lindsay did not turn out in larger numbers, to witness such interesting proceedings, which was owing, no doubt, to the fact of this being the first ceremony of the kind held in that spirited town. The visitors, especially the Peterborough Oddfellows, were very much pleased with the generous hospitality extended to them by the Lindsay brethren. They were met on their arrival by deputations and escorted to the hall, after which they were well entertained, many being driven around to see the sights.

Taking a Birdseye View.

Quite a number of our citizens who have never seen the town of Peterborough all at once, take a walk occasionally to the scene of work now going on, on the spire at St. Peter's Cathedral. The other day a few of the "brave" climbed up as far as the ball, where a full stop was made, one of the party getting dizzy. He said that he was satisfied that Peterborough was a good town without seeing any more of it.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Variable winds, mostly fair, warm weather, with showers or thunder storms in a few places.

The Market.

The prices at the market this morning were as follows:—Butter, 16 to 17 cents per pound; eggs, 13 cents per doz.; chickens, 45 cents per pair; peas, 20 cents per peck; apples, 30 cents per peck; raspberries, 75 cents per pail. There were a few loads of hay, which sold at $12 per ton.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	74°	29.10°
1 o'clock	88°	29.10°
3 o'clock	87°	29.10°

First-Class Soap.

We have had the pleasure of thoroughly testing the "Economical or Labour Saving Soap," manufactured in Peterborough by Mr. Benjamin Green, and can heartily recommend it as performing all that is claimed for it. It possesses the peculiar property of cleansing clothing with at least one-third of the labour necessary when common soaps are used. Thus the articles of clothing are subjected to less wear and tear. Mr. Green's soap is chemically so pure, that its use will not injure the most delicate colors in fabrics. We can strongly recommend it as being unsurpassed for laundry purposes. There is no cheaper nor better soap in the market.

Nearly a Fire.

This morning at about 5 o'clock as Mr. J. Stevenson's gardener was passing the Central Iron Works building, a portion of which is used by the Peterborough Lock Works, he noticed smoke issuing from the crevices of the door on Simcoe street and at once sounded the alarm. On investigation it was found that the fire, which originated underneath a large stove, used in melting lead for knob work, had been smouldering all night and had just begun to take hold of the joists. About a dozen pails of water were used and the trouble was over. A number of firemen turned out promptly and had to go home again without indulging in exercise except a run, which sharpened their appetites for breakfast.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Excursion to Belleville.

Arrangements have been completed to run an excursion to Belleville by regular train on Peterborough's Civic Holiday. The use of Bleecker's Grove, near the Grand Trunk Station, has been granted for the excursionists. Fare, $1.00 the round trip. Tickets good for two days.

Steamer Golden Eye.

Don't forget that Thursday is cheap excursion day to Idyl Wild and Harwood. Return fare only 60 cents. The steamer will leave the wharf at 8 a. m. and run straight to Idyl Wild and Harwood, leaving again at 4 o'clock, giving lots of time for fishing, sailing and bathing. She also runs every Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Sunday School Pic-nic.

Three hundred and twenty-five individuals accompanied the excursion to Campbelltown yesterday, under the management of the Charlotte-street Methodist Sunday School. The boat landed the party at the grounds at 12 o'clock noon, and an exceedingly pleasant afternoon's enjoyment was spent, despite the heat of the day. The Rev. F. H. Wallace was present, which fact was most gratifying to the children, who went in for the athletic sports with a will. The party arrived home at a reasonable hour in the evening. The pic-nic was most successful in every way, and netted the handsome sum of $45 over all expenses, for the funds of the school.

The Great Circus and Menagerie

Is coming, and everybody knows this fact. All are intimately aware that John B. Doris' New monster Shows, Three-Ring Circus, Mammoth Museum, Deep-Sea Aquarium, Elevated Theater Stage, and Fifty-Cage Menagerie is universally acknowledged to be the greatest and grandest conglomeration of startling and attractive wonders ever exhibited under canvas. Will positively be in Peterborough on Aug. 13th. We will give a brief but correct synopsis of what you will see in John B. Doris' New Monster Moral Shows. It would be impossible, however, in an ordinary newspaper report, to give details concerning this mammoth aggregation. However, a few of them can be mentioned, and to these justice can not be done. First, and foremost of all, comes the ponderous and pioneer war elephant, "Betts," who has won over one hundred and fifty hard-fought battles, and is one hundred and forty-one years old. She, although aged, is one of the best performing elephants in the world; was captured in British India, and at one time was the property of Ahmed Shah Durani. She is a wonderful curiosity, and no person should fail to see "Betts," the oldest elephant in the world.

THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1885.

EAST DURHAM.

At the Reform convention, held at Millbrook yesterday, Mr. W. T. R. Preston, formerly publisher of the Port Hope News, was nominated in the Liberal interest. In regard to ability and acquaintance with political matters, as well as in every other respect, the selection is an excellent one. If the people of East Durham should select Mr. Preston they will have a competent and creditable representative. He is a good speaker and a most energetic worker and will make a gallant fight in the coming contest, and if well supported will win the day.

EXPLANATORY.

When Mr. Duncan McLeod in future publishes what purports to be an interview with the publisher of this paper, we shall be glad if he will do us the justice of giving the entire substance of the conversation at such interview.

Mr. McLeod must remember that the publisher of the EXAMINER is the best judge of what is of interest to his readers and when we refused his clipping we did so because it was undesirable matter, which would not accomplish any good, and which would be inclined to stir up bitter animosity in an otherwise peaceful community.

Mr. McLeod requires more ability than even he can command to hoodwink the Protestants of the community. Mr. McLeod's attitude towards the Reform party is well known both to the members of it and also to Conservatives. If the Government had estimated Mr. McLeod at the high standard of merit fixed by himself and given him one of the many offices on which he has been a disinterested applicant, we have no doubt that he would have remained to this day a supporter of the Reform party. We trust he is satisfied with the present position he occupies politically—the Reform party regarding his defection from its ranks with satisfaction and the Conservative party afraid to trust a man, whose inordinate appetite for pap must be satisfied at the risk of his turning traitor on the slightest provocation.

Split in the Tory Party.

Lord Randolph Churchill Rebels.

LONDON, July 30.—A split in the Tory camp, which threatens to become serious, was made public last evening, when Lord Randolph Churchill declined, at the last moment, to attend a great Tory meeting at Liverpool, at which he had been advertised as one of the chief speakers. He based his refusal on the fact that the two Tory members for Liverpool had declined to support him, owing to the Irish policy of the cabinet. The Morning Post and Standard both show discontent from some cause.

The Scientific Frontier.

Salisbury Favors Beaconsfield's Afghan Policy.

LONDON, July 29.—Lord Salisbury made a significant speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet this evening. He eulogized the policy of the late Lord Beaconsfield in dealing with the Afghan question; that that policy was to establish a scientific frontier for India, and after that to claim nothing more, but to accept nothing less. He hoped that when the next Lord Mayor's banquet was held the Conservatives would be able to show peace with Russia and the prosperity of Egypt secured.

LONDON, July 30.—The Standard, (Tory) expresses great dissatisfaction with Lord Salisbury's speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet last evening, and with his Irish policy.

London Vice.

The Revelations are True—Report of the Pall Mall Gazette's Investigation Committee.

LONDON, July 29.—The committee to inquire into the recent statements of the Pall Mall Gazette in regard to London vice, has made the following report :—

"Having been requested to inquire as to the truth of the statements printed in the Pall Mall Gazette from July 6th to July 10th. We decided from the first to exclude inquiry into charges against particular men or classes of men, or against the police. We strictly confined ourselves to an inquiry into the system of criminal vice described. After carefully sifting the evidence of the witnesses and materials before us, without guaranteeing the accuracy of every particular, we are satisfied that on the whole the statements of the Pall Mall Gazette are substantially true."

The report is signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, Cardinal Manning and Messrs. Morley and Reid.

A late edition of the Pall Mall Gazette was published this evening containing the foregoing report in leaded type.

Stove Works Building.

In a day or two, the foundation of the Powell & Jones Stove Works building will be completed, and it is expected that the brick work will commence at once, and be pushed on as rapidly as possible. The joists have been laid in some of the sections, and rest solidly on heavy timbers embedded in mortar. The stone work so far has been completed in a solid and substantial manner, as is fitting for the resting place of a superstructure which will have to bear the weight of tons upon tons of stoves, stove castings, etc.

Campbellford.

So heavy have been the orders for manufacture in the Trent Valley Woollen Mills, of late, that it has been impossible to keep pace with them. To meet this demand and to "catch up" with the work, the employees have been summoned back to labor after their day's work is done on extra time. We believe that this will continue about two hours and a-half three nights a week until the strain is overcome and business comes back to its former level.—Herald.

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Tropical days and elysian nights.

Do not forget the English Church services in the Town Hall, at 3 p.m. next Sunday, August 2nd.

Mr. Hunt, who officiated most acceptably in Mr. Andrews' place for two Sabbaths, has gone to Hastings county to visit his brother, Rev. Mr. Hunt, of the Methodist Church.

The W.C.T.U. held a meeting in the basement of the Presbyterian Church last Sunday, Dr. Massie in the chair. There was a medium attendance, and the audience was addressed, first by Kenneth Mark, Esq., who most eloquently gave his ideas on the way to combat and put down King Alcohol. His arguments were powerful and his reasoning incontestible. Next, J. Kindred, sen., gave an impromptu speech that charmed all, and appealed forcibly to the hearts and consciences of every one who heard it. Then Dr. Harrison came forward, only to show which side he was on, he said, but did not give his expected address, owing to the lateness of the hour. He, however, made a suggestion it would be well to act upon, namely, that there should be more of these open meetings, and that they should be varied by recitations, readings, essays, etc., by contributors of both sexes.

Six or eight Hastings lads, in playing lacrosse on one of the islands, lost their ball in the lake, when they turned the prows of their two fine skiffs Keene-ward and were cordially received by our own club, who played a Keene and spirited game with their unexpected visitors before they left.

Duncan McIntyre, second son of Donald McIntyre, carpenter, of this village, met with a bad accident on Tuesday last. He was working with his brother on a barn in Durham, and he fell from the roof and broke his arm, besides receiving other serious injuries.

The Union Sunday School pic-nic takes place to-day, (Thursday. The children will be conveyed by the steam yacht Beaver and the inevitable scow, to their destined place of enjoyment, Cameron's Point, below Birdsall's.

Stuart Masson, Esq., of the firm of Stone & Masson, solicitors, and Mr. VanEvery, of Fair, VanEvery & Co., Peterborough, paid our village a short visit on Tuesday evening, and expressed themselves delighted with the romantic beauty of our surroundings and the locality generally.

The Ottawa excursion was patronized by Mr. and Mrs. John Frost and others of this vicinity.

Last Thursday morning our brave boys returned from the Northwest. The same evening a basket party, in honor of their return, was held at the house and on the grounds of Mr. Kenneth Mark, teacher. It was a most enjoyable affair in every way, and many were the hearty hand shakes, kind wishes and words of welcome bestowed upon the "boys." Mr. Mark and his good lady are worthy of all praise for their generous kindness in giving up their house and grounds so unreservedly. Mr. Mark himself is an old Crimean veteran and that evening wore two medals, conferred on him for services in the great war. One was from our Queen, with Victoria's profile on one side and on the reverse the word "Crimea," while the badge bore the significent words, "Alma," "Balaclava," "Inkermann," and "Sebastopol.' The other medal was from the Sultan of Turkey and is a beautiful token of which Mr. Mark may justly be proud. The two show honorable service rendered to Queen and country, and Mr. Geo. Mark no doubt inherited the martial fire and zeal that sent him in his father's footsteps, to do battle for his country's peace. He, with him comrades, Messrs. Alex. Ross, Wm. Wedlock, James McFee, Duncan McFarlane, H. Phillips and Marshall Weir, will, no doubt, long remember the pleasant home-coming and delightful evening at Mr. Mark's, the large crowd and feasting, the music, promenading, lacrosse, and general enjoyment that ended in the usual Queen's Anthem and many rousing cheers, for everybody and everything deserving cheers, and the laughing separation at the late hour of 11 p. m. or thereabouts, and may it be centuries before we shall know war's alarms again. On Saturday following, Captain Burke gave each his salary, which with the $10 from the Mayor of Peterborough and the neat little sum subscribed locally, must have made the boys' hearts twice glad.

Mr. Alex. Ross, one of the seven, has returned to the Northwest to join the mounted police. He is a fine stalwart fellow and the right sort of staff for the service.

Three men have been arrested at Montceau Les Mines, France, on a charge of attempting to blow up a church at Savignes with dynamite.

Cousin of the Late Jesse James.

The other day a big, greasy, stout, healthy-looking beggar entered one of the leading establishments on Fourth-street, St. Louis. The first person he encountered after entering the portals of the store was a well-dressed young man of affable and pleasant manners. The mendicant proceeded to narrate a well concocted story four and a half yards long. He was cut short by the salesman, who curtly remarked that he had nothing to waste on big, burly beggars.

Eyeing the young man from head to foot, and giving him a you-are-certainly-not-going-to-refuse-me look, the beggar endeavored to shame the young salesman into contributing something.

"If I was as well dressed and prosperous looking as you are," said the mendicant, "I would be ashamed to refuse a dime to a poor man like myself. Look at that fine diamond pin there! Look at that watch and chain there and cutaway clothes! Oh, I'd be ashamed, I would."

"Now, here," said the salesman, "when I give my money away I want to know that it goes for some worthy charity and not into the beer saloon."

These remarks delivered, he pushed the beggar out of the way, whereupon the latter said slowly, but in a determined manner, his eyes meanwhile riveted on the young man, "Don't crowd me! I'm a second cousin to the late Jesse James."

The salesman's blood was now at the boiling point and the second cousin of Jesse James lost no time in getting out doors.—St. Louis Republican.

Thoroughness and Neatness Pay.

Intelligent observers have generally noted the fact that in every rural neighborhood the prosperous farmers are almost invariably those who keep their buildings painted, fences in good repair and their fields free from stone, weeds and rubbish. Of course it may be said that men who have plenty of money can afford to spend it for keeping up appearance. But this is evidently not the full explanation of this coincidence of facts. Men who make money, especially in farming, are least inclined to lay it out merely for show. It may be safely put down as a general rule that the work performed by most thrifty farmers is in the direction of profit, hence, as neatness commonly goes with thrift, it is quite as likely to be one of its causes as one of its effects. There are exceptions to this rule, as to all others. Some farmers accumulate money still more rapidly, not by increasing their income, but by a system of grinding parsimony, by robbing themselves and cheating their families to put dollars in their purses. These are not examples to be imitated. The aim of most reasonable men is not only to make money, but in the meantime to live in a reasonable and comfortable manner. To accomplish these objects it is not difficult to prove that neatness is essential.

There are many reasons why habits of neatness in farming lead to success. Such habits are none too common, and in every business the men who do their work in the most thorough manner get the best pay. The world is full of poor work that of necessity can be poorly paid. The farmer who grows his crops among weeds can never sell his grain at the highest market price, while the extra care needed, to secure absolute purity is sure to be proportionately well paid. Farmers understand this well enough, as is shown by their periodic endeavors to secure pure seed for sowing and planting. If we go to almost any market we will find that the bulk of crops is more or less mixed, and, therefore, unsalable for seed and undesirable for any purpose. Almost every spring there is an active demand for seed barley, free from oats or other varieties of barley, and not unfrequently farmers buy from seed stores, paying from two to four times the price at which they sold their grain the fall previous. In almost any neighborhood a farmer who will grow pure seed of the various grains will find a demand for his entire stock at prices enough better than market rates to assure him a profit. When we are told that farming is not profitable, the implication is that reference is made to the common slovenly method. The fancy kind of farming, such as growing seeds and garden vegetables, nearly always pay those who intelligently conduct them. Yet seed growing and gardening are really as true farming as growing hay or making butter and cheese. They are only better paid because they cannot be conducted without close attention to details, and it is in this that neatness consists. —American Cultivator.

In Love with Edwin Booth.

Speaking of the persecutions of actors reminds a writer in the New York Star of a very pretty story regarding Edwin Booth. It was while he was playing in the Winter Garden that a young miss in her teens fell desperately in love with him. She was the only daughter of wealthy parents, and night after night she would make some excuse to leave home and go to the theatre. She deluged Booth with love letters, and finally he wrote to her telling her to meet him at the stage door at the end of the performance on a certain evening. She was there according to appointment. Booth handed her into his carriage and gave some whispered instructions to the driver. The horses were driven rapidly, and in a few moments the girl found herself in front of her own home. The carriage stopped and Booth assisted her to alight. Taking her arm in his he walked with her up the stoop and rang the bell. It was late and the girl's father, who had become very anxious about her whereabouts, opened the door.

"Mr. ——," said Booth, very quietly, "I have brought your daughter home. She has been very foolish, but she has promised never to do so again, and I would advise you to take better care of her." With these words he turned and left. That young girl is a happy wife and mother now, but she never tires of telling the lesson she received from the great

FEDERATION OF THE EMPIRE.

The project of the federation of the empire shows that its promoters have faith in posterity, and in the ultimatic legislative unification of all British subjects. We have received the "draft constitution for the federation of the British Empire." The following are the principal provisions of the constitution for the Colonies:—Loyalty to the Throne; a federal Parliament meeting in London, members must speak English; the representation to bear some proportion to the population of each country; the rules, regulations and status of the electors of each colony to be governed by its legislature; each colony to provide for the maintenance of its members; each colony to elect Federal lords to sit in the British House of Lords. The proposed Federal Parliament is to consist of 642 members, two-thirds of which are to be selected from Great Britain and Ireland and one-third from the colonies, the number of representatives of the latter to be fixed at 214. The Dominion of Canada is to contribute 45 members, and the other colonies in proportion. A convention is called to consider the subject of British Empire Federation, to meet in Exeter Hall, London, on June 14th, 1886, and invitations are extended to fifty-six of the colonial possessions of Great Britain, situated in every part of the world. Whatever success may attend the promotion of so vast an undertaking it is probable that very few now living will live to see its realization.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is currently reported that Mr. Thomas White is to be Sir David Macpherson's successor as Minister of the Interior. It requires very little effort to get a better incumbent for this position, but to get a worse one —hoc opus hoc labor est.

The announcement that Col. Middleton, whose local rank is Major-General, has been promoted to be Major-General of the British Army vice G. N. Boldew, retired, will be received with gratification by all Canadians. Major-General Middleton will be sincerely and warmly congratulated by all classes in the Dominion; and his promotion hailed as a deserved recognition by the Imperial government of his services in suppressing the rebellion in the Canadian North-West.

The number of deaths reported from cholera in Spain amount to 700 a day. It is highly probable that large numbers of cases are unreported. There is yet no sign of abatement. The practice of innoculation has been tried without any beneficial results. The skill of physicians produces no perceptible diminution in the presentage of deaths. It is highly probable that before the summer closes it will spread over Europe and reach this continent. Proper sanitary measures should be everywhere adopted to prevent this most deadly contagion finding a lodgment.

The Conservative journals made a great howl over the Blake-Brown letters, which Sir John bought to read in the House, but the prompt publication of them, and the prompt action of Hon. Mr. Blake in furnishing the portion of the correspondence that Sir John could not bury, and which showed that he had nothing to be ashamed of or to conceal in the matter, effectually closed their mouths. The studied suppression of letters written by Dominion Ministers to influence the local election in Algoma shows that there is something very crooked and corrupt, which prudence suggests had better be kept in the dark.

Manitoba South-Western.

Tenders for the construction of the Manitoba South-Western branch of the Canadian Pacific have been solicited. The contract calls for the building of 70 miles this summer, the work to be completed in time to enable the farmers to get their grain to the market just as soon as it is harvested. The work will be pushed ahead with all possible speed until the road is completed. Already a large number of men have been sent out to secure the right of way so that whoever the contractor may be, he will be in a position to rush on the work.

Trial of Louis Riel.

First Day's Evidence.

The following report of the evidence offered on the first day of the trial of Riel, was held over from yesterday's issue:

Another letter was addressed to the Indians and halfbreeds at Battleford, asking them to revolt.

Dr. Willoughby, of Saskatoon, was the first witness called by the crown. Having been sworn, he said that the prisoner had stated to him that the Fort Garry trouble, when Scott had been shot, was nothing to what was going to take place. He said that the Indians only waited for him to strike the first blow to join him, and that he had the United States at his back. He seemed greatly excited, and said: "It is time, doctor, that the breeds should assert their rights, and it will be well for those who have lived good lives." A party of armed men then drove up, and Riel said, pointing to them: "My people intend striking a blow for their rights. They have petitioned the Government over and over again, the only reply being an increase of the police force each time." He said that the settlers at Saskatoon were deserving of no sympathy from the patriots, because they had offered Battleford last fall to furnish men to suppress the anticipated Indian outbreak. As Riel put it, they offered men to assist in killing the breeds. The Indians, he said, had arranged their plans, and when the first blow was struck they would be joined by the American Indians. They would issue a proclamation, and assert that the time had arrived for him to rule the country or perish in the attempt. He had a long conversation relative to the government about to be established. Riel said the members would be God fearing men, not like those at Ottawa. He promised to divide the country into seven equal portions, one of which was to be the new Ireland of the new Northwest. He said the rebellion of fifteen years ago was not a patch on what this would be. The witness left shortly afterwards for Clarke's Crossing to telegraph the authorities at Regina, but he found the wires were down. He then telegraphed Col. Morris, commanding at Battleford, giving him full particulars. Reil said he had been furnished with a copy of the telegram sent by the Saskatoon settlers to Battleford, offering to assist to kill the Indians and breeds, therefore they must expect no sympathy from him.

To Mr. Kirkpatrick—Saw Reil about November for the last time. He was well aware of the agitation among the breeds. Riel said the Bavarians, the Germans, the Polanders, the Hungarians and Americans had promised to assist him. For this each would be given a fair share of the Northwest territory. The plans, said the witness, struck me as being peculiar.

To Mr. Christopher Robinson.—Saw Riel take a gun into the sleigh with him before leaving.

Thos. McKay, a halfbreed, was the next witness. McKay, who was most intelligent, gave his evidence in a straightforward manner. He had first heard of the agitation in March last. He heard that Riel was exciting the breeds to take up arms. About the 20th of March he received a letter from Major Crozier saying the breeds were committing depredations, and asked the witness to bring reinforcements to Carlton. In response Captain Moore with forty men started for there. Then the witness went to Batoche, where he found armed men guarding the river. He crossed over and saw Riel, who accused him of neglecting his people, saying but for people like the witness their grievances would have been settled long ago. Riel became very excited and said. "You don't know what we are. It is a war of extermination we want. We want blood, blood, blood. Nothing but blood will do us."

Being one o'clock, the court adjourned.

On resuming at two o'clock, the witness continued:—Riel accused him (the witness) before the council of many things of which he was not guilty. Phillip Garneau acted as secretary, taking down the minutes and evidence given against the witness. He returned to Carlton on the 24th of March and was sent by Major Crozier to discover what he could about Commissioner Irvine, who was said to be on his way with reinforcements. The witness then described the fight at Duck Lake, and the evacuation of Carlton.

Cross-examined by Mr. Greenshields—Never had a personal quarrel with Riel. Riel said he was going to make a demonstration against the Government.

John Astley, surveyor, of Prince Albert, who was one of Riel's prisoners, said he posted up a proclamation for Major Crozier through the settlement, which he afterwards discovered had been torn down. The witness gave a vivid description of his capture and imprisonment by Riel, and his subsequent release by the volunteers at Batoche. Riel acknowledged to him that he ordered his men in the name of the Almighty to fire at Duck Lake. He did not do so, however, until, as he thought, the police had fired. Riel told him he must have another fight with the soldiers to secure better terms of surrender from Gen. Middleton.

Cross-examined by J. C. Johnstone—He told Riel it was bad for his cause to employ the Indians. When the prisoner replied it was not his wish to do so, but that of his associates.

H. Ross and Peter and Wm. Tompkins corroborated the evidence of the last witness, as did the Indian agent Lash, who was also a prisoner with the rebels.

George Ness also gave similar evidence, but no points of importance were brought out.

It being six o'clock the court adjourned.

Even at this early stage it appears evident the defence intend relying to a great extent upon the insanity plea. The cross-examination of the witnesses, which all expected would be severe, was little more than formal to-day.

Riel takes copious notes of everything, and since the production of his ultimatum to Major Crozier, and the threat to Gen. Middleton to massacre the prisoners if anything happened the women and children, he had been evidently taking more notice of the proceedings.

Gen. Middleton was present in the court all the afternoon. It is expected he will be called on to-day.

The Canadian Pacific Railway.

The Road to be Extended to Windsor—Work on the Main Line.

President Stephen, of the Canadian Pacific told a Windsor citizen who was in Ottawa last week that the road would positively be extended to Windsor within a year. The arrangements which the Canadian Pacific has with the Michigan Central for the transfer of through freight from east of St. Thomas to the Detroit River are not satisfactory to the latter road. On through freight from Montreal the Michigan Central authorities complain that they are not allowed a margin large enough to pay for hauling the cars from St. Thomas, and in one instance recently they refused to take the cars at the rate the Canadian Pacific made with the shippers.

Mr. Wm. Whyte, General Superintendent Eastern and Ontario divisions Canadian Pacific Railway, states that the work on the section of the road along the north shore of Lake Superior is progressing very favorably. There are now over thirty locomotives employed in hauling ballast and dirt for the fillings. The whole of the work will, he hopes, be completed some time next month.

Dominion Doings.

Montreal subscribed $1,042 to receive her returning volunteers.

The men of the 9th Battalion, Quebec, were paid off Thursday.

Three brothers, Cornelius, Arnold and Frank Mills, of Bath, Ont., were fishing when their boat upset and Cornelius and Arnold were drowned.

Capt. Howard, of Gatling gun fame, left Toronto for home Thursday morning. He was given a rousing send off.

There were ten deaths from small pox in Montreal last week.

A number of prominent journalists and others of Paris, will accompany Rev. Cure Labelle home to Quebec from Paris. They will visit the Saskatchewan river and Niagara Falls.

A man named Drolet has just died in Montreal from a disease resembling that of cholera.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Copping, an old couple living at Roxton Falls, Que., were thrown from their carriage the other day and fatally injured.

Lieut. Doherty of the 65th, was banqueted by the junior Conservative association in Montreal Thursday night.

The Police authorities of Hamburg, Germany, offer a reward of $5,000 for the arrest and conviction of Baker, Flyn and Burns, three American burglars, who robbed the Bank Vareins in June last, and are supposed to be in Canada.

The 9th Battalion, Quebec, will present a sword of honor to Lieut. Pelletier, the only member of the battalion who was under fire, at Cut knife Hill, and was wounded. He was attached to "A" battery.

Traffic receipts of the C. P. R. last week were $207,000 compared with $125,000 for the corresponding period last year.

W. Campbell Pelan, who was arrested in Montreal, extradited to Boston for forgery, and is now serving a term in prison, has sent to his Canadian counsel affidavits proving his innocence.

The Toronto builders' laborers strike has been settled by arbitrators. The men were getting 16c. per hour and struck for 18c. The arbitrators gave them 17c.

The Prince of Wales Rifles, who were under orders for active service, and who put in a couple of weeks under canvas in Montreal, have petitioned the government for similar grants to those given the troops in active service in the Northwest.

The New Model.

Last week, Mr. Lewis Smith, of Brockville, who brought the first Hall Thresher into Canada from Rochester, in 1839, paid his annual visit to the Joseph Hall Machine Works here. A few days after Mr. E. W. Sheldon, of Chantry, who imported a Hall Machine in 1840, was in town on the same mission. Both of these gentlemen continued to deal with the late Mr. Hall, at Rochester, until he opened a branch here, in 1858, and they have ever since represented the Joseph Hall Machine Works in their respective localities. Mr. Jonathan Yorke, of St. Thomas, who also bought a Hall Thresher in 1840, is expected here soon. While these gentlemen have been constant and active advocates for the Hall Machine, and have used more threshing machines themselves than any three men living in Canada, they all unite in declaring that the New Model is very greatly in advance of, in fact, AS A PERFECT GRAIN SAVER, THRESHER AND CLEANER, completely distances all other grain threshing machines. After nearly half a century of practical experience they should be able to form a correct opinion.—Ontario Reformer, July 24th.

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter III—Continued.

"Thank you," I said. "I dare say I shall be very comfortable. You may expect me about seven o'clock."

I had re-engaged my old rooms in Walpole street before the meeting with my unknown had changed my plans. I went back there, and after packing up all I wanted, informed the people of the house that I was going to stay at a friend's for a few weeks. The rooms were to be kept for me all the same. At seven o'clock I was at Maida vale and duly installed.

It was the hand of fate had wrought this—who could doubt it? This morning I was almost on my way to Turin in search of my love. This evening I am beneath the same roof. As I sit here in my arm-chair and see all kinds of beautiful visions wreathed in the smoke curling from my cigar, I can scarcely believe that she is within a few feet of me—that I shall see her to-morrow—the next day—forever and ever! Yes, I am hopelessly in love—I go to bed thinking I shall dream of her; but, probably owing to the strange quarters, my dreams are far less pleasant. All night long I dream of the blind man who walked into a strange house and heard such fearful sounds!

CHAPTER IV.

NOT FOR LOVE OR MARRIAGE.

A week has passed by. I am more in love than ever. I am now satisfied as to the thoroughness of my passion; certain that this thorough love of mine will endure as long as my life; that it is no transient flush to fade away with time or absence. Whether my suit be successful or not this woman will be my first and last love.

As yet I have made little progress in the furthering of my desire. I see her every day, because I watch for her coming and going; and every time I see her I find fresh charms in her face and graces in her figure. Yet Kenyon was right. Hers is a peculiar style of beauty. That pale, pure face, those dark, dreamy, far-away eyes, are out of the common run of womanhood. It may be this accounts for the strange fascination she has for me. Her carriage is upright and graceful; she walks always at the same pace: her face is always grave, and it seems to me she seldom speaks to that old companion or servant who never quits her side. I am beginning to look upon her as a riddle, and wonder if the key will ever be mine.

I have found out some few things about her. Her name is Pauline—a sweet and suitable name—Pauline March. She is therefore English, although I sometimes hear her saying a few words in Italian to old Teresa, her servant. She seems to know no one, and, so far as I can learn, no one knows more about her than I do—I, at least, know she came from Turin, and that is more than my informants were aware of.

I still occupy my rooms, waiting my chance. It is tantalizing to live in the same house with the one you love and find no opportunity of even commencing the siege. That old Teresa guards her charge like a thorough-bred Spanish duenna. Her dark eyes glance quickly and suspiciously at me whenever I meet the two women, and bid them the good-morning which a fellow-lodger may venture upon. As yet I have got no further than these cold civilities. Pauline's eyes and manner give me no encouragement. She acknowledges my salutation gravely, distantly and apathetically. It is clear to me that love at first sight is not bound to be reciprocal. I comfort myself by thinking that Fate must have something in store for me, or Pauline and I would never have been brought face to face again.

So all I can do is to lurk behind the thick red curtains of my window and watch my love, guarded by that old cat Teresa, go out and come in. I am obliged now to exercise due caution in this proceeding, as the duenna once caught sight of me, and now each time they pass I see her fierce eyes peering into my hiding place. I am beginning to hate Teresa.

Yet if I have done little, I am in the same house, breathing the same air as Pauline, and I am a patient man and can wait for my opportunity. It will be sure to come at last.

This is how it came. One evening I heard a fall, a clatter of china and a cry of distress. I ran out of my room and found Teresa lying on the stairs amid the ruins of the landlady's best tea-set, and groaning earnestly. My chance had come!

With the shameless hypocrisy of love, I ran to her aid, as eager to help her as though she had been my mother. I endeavored, in the most tender manner, to raise her; but she sank back, wailing out something about, "one of ze foots broke."

It was clear that Teresa's English was not her strong point; so I asked her in Italian what was the matter. She brightened up as she heard her own language, and I found that she had sprained her knee so severely that she was unable to rise. I told her that I would carry her to her room, and without more ado picked her up and bore her up-stairs.

Pauline was standing on the landing. Her large dark eyes were opened wide, her whole appearance that of affright. I paused a moment and explained what had happened, then I took the old woman into the room which she occupied and laid her on the bed. The servant of the house was sent for a doctor, and, as I retired, Pauline smiled me quietly, but I fancied listlessly, for my kindness. Those dreamy eyes met mine, yet scarcely seemed to know it. Yes, I was obliged to confess it, my goddess was in manner apathetic—but then, her beauty! Those refined regular features, the girlish but well-formed figure—the thick brown hair, even those strange dark eyes. Surely there was no woman in the world to compare with her.

She gave me her hand at parting—a small well-formed soft hand. I could scarcely refrain from pressing my lips to it—I could scarcely refrain from telling her then and there that for months I had thought of her and her only—but injudicious as such proceedings might have been at a first meeting they would have been doubly so whilst old Teresa was lying and, in spite of her pains, with suspicious eyes watching every movement of mine; so I could only express a wish to be of further service to her and bow myself out discreetly.

But the ice was broken—our hands had met. Pauline and I were strangers no longer!

Old Teresa's sprain, although not such a serious affair as she fancied, kept her indoors for several days. I hoped this would enable me to improve my acquaintance with her mistress, but the result was not commensurate with the hope. For the first few days Pauline, so far as I knew, did not leave the house. Once or twice I met her on the stairs and, assuming fictitious interest in the old woman, kept her in conversation for a minute or two. It seemed to me that she was painfully shy—so shy that the conversation I would fain have prolonged, after a little while died a natural death. I was not conceited enough to attribute her shyness and reticence to the same cause which made me blush and stammer as I spoke to her.

At last, one morning I saw her leave the house alone. I took my hat and followed her. She was walking up and down the pavement in front of the house. I joined her, and, after the usual inquiry for Teresa, continued at her side. I must make an attempt to establish matters on a better footing between us. "You have not been long in England, Miss March?" I said.

Ballet Slippers With Wooden Toes.

"Speaking of shoes," says Clara Belle, "I have won a dozen pairs of gloves on a shoe wager. I was at the Metropolitan Alcazar, as our big music garden is now called. The performance consists in part of a ballet. My escort said it was queer how the chief whirler, kicker and pirouetter could get up that way on her toes. He should think her big toes would give way at the ends. I said that the strain came on her ankles and not on her toes, because her slippers had wooden ends, into which her toes fitted. He wouldn't believe it. We made a bet. Next day we went to a theatrical goods store and I asked for ballet slippers. The clerk handed down, as I knew he would, a pair of white satin ones with wooden ends made of blocks gouged out, trimly shaped and covered by the satin. Alleviate your sympathy with this knowledge whenever you see a dancer apparently grinding her toe-nails on the boards."

The Daily Examiner.

THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Just Received.

A lot of Linen Damask, Table Cloths and Napkins, various sizes; slightly imperfect but cheap. J. Erskine. d48-6in.

Nearly a Fire.

About 9.30 last night the fire alarm sounded, which sound was promptly responded to by the Fire Brigade It was not necessary, however, to bring the engine out of its position, as the fire, which was caused by the burning of some old rags behind W. Fairweather & Co's. store, was quenched with a few pails of water.

Prob'e Weather Premises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meteorological office:—Light to moderate winds, mostly south-east and south-west; generally fair weather, with showers or thunder storms in a few places. Not much change in temperature.

Improving the Oppertunity.

The Millbrook Messenger comes out this week draped in mourning in memory of the late Col. Williams. It contains 24 columns of reading matter, descriptive of the late funeral in Port Hope, or referring exclusively to incidents in his career in connection with the late outbreak in the North-West. There are only about a dozen lines referring to any other matter.

aseball.

Last night at the Riverside Park Messrs. Fred. J. O'Neil and P. J. Sullivan, the new battery—pitcher and catcher—of the Peterborough Club, made their first appearance, which proved most satisfactory to the local nine. A very good game was played, but at the same time the fielding of some of the players might be greatly improved upon. We hope to see the boys get down to their work at once and try and make a decent show against the Lindsay team here on Tuesday next.

Lacrosse.

The secretary of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club to-day received a challenge from Mr. John F. Smith, of the St. Paul, Minnesota, club. This club holds the championship of the United States, and wish to have a match arranged for the latter part of August, when they will pass through Peterborough and other Canadian towns and cities on a tour. It is very probable that the challange will be accepted, and the match arranged to suit our American cousins.

Scott Act.

A meeting of the committees of the Peterborough Scott Act Association was held on Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Fife occupied the chair, and among those present were Messrs. G. A. Cox, J. W. Flavelle, John Erskine, Revs. A. Bell, I. Tovell and W. Bennett. There were also representatives from Keene, Lakefield, Blairton, Otonabee, Douro, Smith and Ennismore. It was decided to forward the petition to Ottawa at once, and request the authorities there to have the polling day fixed for the 17th September next. The Treasurer stated that the expenses of the contest were estimated at $1,200, and the representatives of the outside municipalities agreed to bear $700 of this expense, leaving $500 to be raised by the town. It was decided to employ organizers, and also arrange for public meetings throughout the county, to be addressed by the leading orators in the cause. A large amount of literature will also be distributed throughout the county. It will be seen from this action that the supporters of the Act are bound to carry on the effort energetically, and they entertain the feeling that there can be little doubt as to what the result will be.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w-1y

Saved Army.

Happy Frank, one of the delegates of Port Hope, will be present at the Saved Army meeting to-night, and will relate his experience, which will be both interesting and instructive, and we have no doubt many will avail themselves of this opportunity to hear him.

Lansdowne Roller Rink.

Don't fail to see the great American Star, Miss Jessie Wartz, at the Lansdowne to-night, her last appearance. Those who witnessed her wonderful performance last night were delighted with the exhibition. Be sure and see her to-night. Admission, ladies 10c.; gentlemen 15c.

Business Quiet.

The Police Court this morning was cool and quiet, and when janitor Beavis unlocked the door and found that there was no cases on hand, he remarked that if the vags but knew how pleasant it was to occupy a seat with the floor so well sprinkled, they would rub up against the first "navy blue" they would meet.

Excursion Coming.

On August 13th the Excelsior Lacrosse Club, of Brampton, Ont., will run an excursion to this town, which will be accompanied by the best dozen of lacrosse players that place possesses. This fact should be sufficient to inspire the boys here to get down to work with a will if they wish to keep up their credit as the leading club of the district. We understand that it is their intention to make a bid for the central district medal as soon as the dispute, now pending, is settled.

Jessie Wartz.

When Miss Jessie Warts appeared on the floor at the Lansdowne rink last night, at ten minutes before nine, and gracefully skimmed around the outer edge, over two thousand eyes were revited on her, and watched her eagerly throughout the fifteen minutes which were occupied in the performance of many very difficult feats on the wheels. Her movements in every figure was most graceful, and as she retired from the floor, and bowed modestly to the spectators, after spinning around like a top for over a minute, the applause which she received was deafening, and evidenced the appreciation of her performance. She appeared a second time in a becoming costume of cardinal, and gave a splendid performance on skates containing but two wheels each. We predict another crowded gallery at the rink to-night.

Building Improvements.

Mr. James Stevenson has workmen employed at present in adding another story to the double tenement house on Aylmer street, between Charlotte and Simcoe streets. The roof is to be of galvanized iron, the mansard covered with slates, Mr. Stevenson reasoning, correctly enough, that the cheapest is not always the best. The Dixon property has recently been receiving special attention also, from Mr. Geo. A. Cox, the four shops of which the property is composed being thoroughly refitted internally, and their external appearance has been beautified with paint. The woodwork and pillars have been painted a dead black, the latter relieved by a dado line of gilding. Mr. E. Burnham, on the opposite side of the street, has his building well under way, and nearly ready for the roof.

The Record of the Spire.

The progress of work on the new spire of St. Peter's Cathedral has taken the workmen up to the old ball and cross. On a piece of tin on the cross was found, engraven in letters about a quarter of an inch in height, the following: "Charles McCarthy, builder, 1846," and close by the following legend, evidently written with a nail or other improvised implement: "William Henry Morrow was here." Another record relates to the erection of the lightning rod, and that record is as follows: "O. R. Kendall, George Smith and James Carpenter put on this lightning rod, August 1st, 1857," and a post script was added, reading: "O. R. Kendall stood on top of cross." This is correct, for there are several persons in town who recollect Mr. Kendall doing what is recorded. Mr. Carveth, the contractor, has a curiosity, in the shape of the metal tip to the lightning rod. This shows that it has been touched at some time by lightning, for the once sharp point is melted into an irregularly shaped blackened lump of metal.

The Post-Office Site.

The rumour has been current since yesterday, that the site for Peterborough's new post-office had been decided upon, and that it has been placed on the lot of Mr. Edward Phalen, corner of George and Charlotte streets. Knowing how deeply the people are interested in the matter, a representative of THE EXAMINER called upon Mr. Hilliard, M. P. That gentleman states that he has not the slightest idea that the rumour alluded to above is correct, and that he has no reason to believe that any other site than that on the corner of Water and Hunter streets will be selected for the post-office. We learn, however, on other good authority, that the conflicting claims of owners of corner lots will receive a quietus by the following compromise. The post-office building is to be placed on the Sawers' lot, and the customs buildings on the Phalen lot. This happy idea of reconciling diverse interests is worthy of the Solomonic stroke of wisdom, that suggested the bisection of a baby to settle the disputes of two rival maternal claimants.

Later.—Since writing the above, Mr. Phalen desires us to state that his site "has positively been selected by the government for the post office, and that the post office will be erected on his corner without any doubt whatever." Who shall decide, when—politicians—disagree?

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Separate School Board.

There will be a special meeting of the Separate School Board this evening at the Murray street school, for the purpose of passing the estimates for the current year.

Westwood.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

A very fine lodge of Good Templars was formed at Westwood, in this county, on Monday evening, July 27th, by Mr. Thos. Lawless, G. W. S., which will be known as "Never Surrender Lodge, No. 212," and will meet on alternate Monday evenings. The charter members number 25, and expect to double their numbers soon. The officers are:

Jas. A. Metcalf	W. C. T.
Miss Annie Humphries	W. V. T.
John Sargent	W. S.
Wm. Wylie	W. F. S.
Mrs. Wm. Wylie	W. T.
Geo. Comstock	W. C.
John McMillan	W. M.
Miss Maggie Cameron	W. T. G.
Geo. Humphries	W. O. G.
Miss Katie Sharp	W. R. H. S.
Miss Jennie Christie	W. L. H. S.
Miss Jennie Brackenridge	W. A. S.
Miss Nellie Humphries	W. D. M.
Joshua Large	P. W. C. T.

Belleville.

A meeting of the building committee of the Methodist Tabernacle was held yesterday to consider the best manner of settling the financial difficulty in which the property has been involved, but in the absence of Dr. Carman, assistant general superintendent, the meeting adjourned until to-morrow at ten o'clock a. m. The amount due on the mortgage, which has been foreclosed, with interest, is between $17,000 and $18,000. The English Loan Society, which advanced the money, in 1868 has sued for the amount and obtained judgment. The papers are now in the hands of the Sheriff and he is endeavouring to collect the amount due. The members of the building committee, who are on the mortgage are Messrs. John Row, Samuel Sills, Wm. Robinson, J. G. Robinson, Sidney McMullen, John McMullen, W. W. Watson, E. N. Goldsmith and the late J. A. Clarke. Mr. N. Lazier, an executor for the estate of the late J. A. Clarke, has been sued with the others. It is quite likely that the church will be sold.—Ontario, July 29.

Dominion Rifle Association.

The exact date of the annual meeting of the Dominion Rifle association is from Monday, 31st August, to Saturday, 5th September, both days inclusive. The date of the Brockville camp is under reconsideration.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short: that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

Town Council.

Two Exemption By-Laws Passed.

The regular meeting of the Town Council was held on Thursday evening in the Council Chamber. Present,—His Worship the Mayor in the chair, and Messrs. Davidson, Hartley, Cahill, Kendry, McNaughton, Kelly, Green, Douglass, Rutherford and Menzies.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

The following

were presented and dealt with as follows:

From J. G. Machlin, with reference to Rink street, saying that the G. T. R. Company were not obliged to act in the matter, according to law.

From W. A. Morrow, enclosing the estimates of receipts and expenditures of the Public Schools for the current year.

From T. Rutherford, with reference to the condition of the hose and engine.—Referred to Finance Committee.

From E. Mannell, on behalf of the City Band, asking that the grant which was made to that body be paid over.—Referred to Finance Committee.

From Patrick McNamara, with reference to the condition of Park street and asking for repairs.—Referred to Street and Bridge Committee with power to act.

ACCOUNTS.

T. Cavanagh	$ 4 00
R. N. Roddy	13 25
Jno. J. Lynch	5 00
John Bryson	6 50
Wm. Snowdon	5 00
Gutta Percha Mfg. Co.	125 00
" " " "	227 50

On motion of Mr. Cahill the accounts were all referred to the Finance Committee.

Moved by Mr. Kendry, seconded by Mr. Hartley,—That the Clerk be authorized to issue his cheque for the sum of $292.75, the amount due the volunteer reception committee.—Carried.

REPORTS.

Mr. Davidson then read the following report from the Finance Committee:

To the Mayor and Councillors of the town of Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN,—The finance committee beg leave to report and recommend the payment of the following accounts:

Peterborough Review	$ 22.41
Ormond & Walsh	40
N. T. Laplante	21.00
N. T. Laplante	10 00
Alex. Elliott	6 65
G. W. Hall	10.00
Wm. Collins	30.00
Wm. Clancy	15.00

The latter three sums are offered without prejudice, and without admitting any liability of the town.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. S. DAVIDSON, Chairman.

Peterborough, July 30th, 1885.

On motion of Mr. Davidson the report was received and adopted.

Mr. Rutherford then read the following report from the License Committee:

To the Mayor and Councillors of the Town of Peterborough:—

GENTLEMEN,—The License Committee beg to report and recommend that the petition of Daly Bros., asking for a pro rata license for billiard tables be not granted. That the petition of John Haggart, asking for an eight months' auction license be granted, also that the petition from John Carnegie, M. P. P., and others, asking that roller rinks be exempted from the paying of a license be not granted, but that it is the opinion of your committee that a license of $50 per annum be charged for each roller rink.

Respectfully submitted,

A. RUTHERFORD, Chairman.

The report was adopted on motion of Mr. Rutherford.

BY-LAWS.

On motion of Mr. Kelly the council went into Committee of the Whole on the first reading of the by-law exempting the Peterborough Lock Works from taxation for a period of ten years, Mr. Menzies taking the chair.

His Worship the Mayor thought that the Council would not hesitate a moment in the passage of the by-law. He said that there were a great many people coming to Peterborough lately, hearing that it was such a prosperous place, and if there were no work to be given them they would be wondering after a while why they came here. At present there was not half enough manufacturing buildings in Peterborough, and on the contrary too many private residences were being put up in proportion to our other manufacturing industries. He thought that such enterprises should be exempted from taxtion in every instance.

Messrs. Kendry, Hartley and Rutherford followed, and concurred in everything which was said by the mayor.

Mr. Kendry said that not only were such manufacturers risking their money by going in for such industries, but after their completion, were running a risk in case such industries were destroyed by fire.

Mr. Douglass thought, that whilst he was in favor of exempting the buildings from taxation for that length of time, the ground worth of the property should be considered.

Mr. Cox said that he hoped the council would take into consideration, that to improve such property, men had to put their hands in their pockets. He said that the town would benefit by it in every way, there were more men here now than were profitably employed, and if any property was raised in value the town would benefit by it some time. He had invested $35,000 in the Dixon property, and he would sign an agreement now to give it to any person for $30,000, at the end of ten years.

Mr. Cahill thought that the Council would treat every person who would build such industries alike, on application.

The Mayor drew the attention of the Council to the town of Lindsay, which recently offered land free to the Sylvester Manufacturing Co. as an inducement to come to town, besides exemption from taxation for a period of 99 years.

On motion of Mr. Rutherford, the by-law passed its second reading.

The committee then rose and the by-law was read for a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hartley the by-law for the exemption from taxation of the Dixon property was read for the first time, the council going into a Committee of the Whole on its second reading, and Mr. Menzies again taking the chair.

On motion of Mr. Cahill the committee rose and the by-law received its third reading and passed.

Moved by Mr. Cahill, seconded by Mr. Davidson,—That the Street Inspector be authorized to confer with the Grand Trunk and C. P. R. Railway Companies for the building of culverts under their respective tracks at their intersection at Rink street.

Moved by Mr. Mr. Green, seconded by Mr. Hartley, that the chairman of the Charity Committee have power to issue an order for a ticket for an indigent to Marysville, Kansas, provided the St. Andrew's Society pay one-third of the amount of the same.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Kelly, seconded by Mr. Green, that the clerk be authorized to have a by-law prepared to exempt the Central Iron Works from taxation for a period of ten years, on the same conditions as the Peterborough Lock Works.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McNaughton, seconded by Mr. Kendry, that the clerk be requested to have a by-law prepared fixing a license fee of $100 for circuses parading the streets, if on enquiry, he finds that can be done.—Carried.

The meeting then adjourned subject to the call of the Mayor.

St. Clair Tunnel.

Work was commenced on Tuesday on the Grand Trunk's proposed tunnel under the St. Clair river at Port Huron. An official of the G. T. R., who has the work in charge, says the company can guarantee 6 per cent. on the capital that will have to be raised and then save $40,000 a year on the present cost of ferriage.

Black-leg in Stock.

WHEELING, Va., July 25.—A strange disease has made its appearance among the cattle of a part of Tyler county. After the death of the animal, which usually occurs twenty-four hours after attacked, the body turns black and the blood seems to have stagnated in the veins prior to death. It is supposed to be black-leg. No remedy will stop the ravages of the disease. So far nineteen cattle have died and the disease shows no signs of abating.

Over Production.

According to statistics published by the American Iron and Steel Association, there are likely to be dull times ahead for those engaged in those industries. The production of pig iron for the first six months of the current year, though less than that of the first half of 1884, is yet considerably in excess of the demand. It amounted to 2,150,816 tons, as against 2,267,021 tons for the first six months of 1884, and 2,322,592 for the latter portion of the year. But the stocks unsold on July 1st amounted to 692,916 tons, as compared with 593,000 tons unsold at the close of last year. Clearly the manufacturers have been making too much iron, and we may expect shortly to hear of operations being suspended and numbers of men temporarily thrown out of work.

Considerate Workmen.

It will doubtless surprise many people to find that workmen, when treated with proper consideration and liberality, are capable both of gratitude and generosity towards their employers. In the Leven ship yard some time ago a ship was put down on speculation merely to keep the men together. Last week the riveters and caulkers, sensible of their employer's kindness, held a meeting, and resolved to ask the firm to reduce their wages 10 per cent., and to intimate that they were willing to do a fortnight's work on the steamer without any wages at all. This is an unprecedented instance of good feeling between masters and men, and shows that after all artisans are much more easily led than driven.—London Truth.

Rusty on French.

A baggegeman yesterday, in Castle Garden, asked a French passenger where he was going, so as to have his baggage checked.

'Je ne sais pas' (I do not know), he replied.

'Genesee Falls!' interpreted the baggagemaster.

Not an Extravagant Enlargement.

Summer resort hotels are putting on big adjectives and otherwise keeping apace with the season. Mosenbaum, who keeps the "Boudoir," was taken to task for stretching his advertisement too much.

"Hi there, Mose," said a friend, "I see you advertise that your rooms have been enlarged."

"So dey haf."

"But there have been no carpenters at work on your place?"

"No! Wait till I tole you. I haf scraped der paper off dose walls. See!"

Fishing on Sunday.

Sir Roderick Cameron and a Supreme Court Judge Caught.

MONTREAL, July 29.—Sir Roderick Cameron, of New York, has been fined by the Government fishery office on the Restigouche for killing salmon on Sunday. One of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada came near sharing the punishment, but was not lucky enough to have killed any fish.

The Hades of Hawaiian Mythology.

The Sandwich Islands boast of two natural wonders—the largest extinct and the largest active volcano in the world. The former is located on the Island of Maui, the summit being nearly 11,000 feet above the level of the sea, and a crater over forty-eight miles in circumference. One can look down into the crater 2,000 feet, the sides now terraced and covered with sandal wood, giant ferns, and a wonderful profusion of tropical flowers and shrubs. The active volcano is situated in the Island of Hawaii. The crater is situated on a spur of Mauna Loa, 4,000 feet above the sea level. The crater is not a cone, but a great pit on a level bench, nine miles in circumference. You go down, down over this almost perpendicular wall 800 feet, and stand on the floor of the crater. This is the place of eternal burnings, the house of everlasting fire of Hawaiian mythology. The area at the bottom of the crater is not a liquid mass, but for miles and miles all around there spreads a scene of unearthly grandeur. Five or six lakes of fire lie to left and right; the floor beneath is so hot one can scarcely walk over it; lava oozes up through the fissures. Huge cones twenty or thirty feet high, made by the bubbles of lava, rise through the seams and are cooled by air.

Limits of Social Co-Operation.

Were all Englishmen now asked if they would agree to co-operate for the teaching of religion, and would give the majority power to fix the creed and the forms of worship, there would come a very emphatic "No" from a large part of them. If, in pursuance of a proposal to revive sumptuary laws, the inquiry was made whether they would bind themselves to abide by the will of a majority as regards the fashion and quality of their clothes, nearly all of them would refuse. In like manner, if (to take an actual question of the day) people were polled to ascertain whether, in respect to the beverages they drank, they would accept the decision of the greater number, half, and probably more than half would very decidedly decline. Similarly with respect to many other sections which most men nowadays consider as matters of purely private concern. Whatever desire there might be to co-operate in carrying on, or regulating such actions, would be far from a unanimous desire. Manifestly, then, had social co-operation to be commenced by ourselves, and had its purposes to be specified before consent to co-operate could be obtained, there would be large parts of human conduct in respect to which co-operation would be declined; and in respect of which, consequently, no authority of the majority over the minority could be rightfully exercised.—Herbert Spencer in Popular Science Monthly for July.

GLEANINGS.

In the National Cemetery at Vicksburg, Miss., 12,000 graves are marked unknown.

Ferdinand Ward is only thirty years old, but he succeeded in borrowing 17,000,000.

The American institution known as the divorce agency has been established in Paris.

Anthony Comstock, through an agent, has begun a crusade in San Francisco against dealers in immoral books and pictures.

The number of Union soldiers killed in battle in the late civil war was 60,-976; died of wounds, 35,947; died of disease, 183,464.

New Hampshire has sixty-nine shoe manufactories, which give employment to 5,000 operatives, and produce $10,-000,000 worth of goods.

A New York clothing house makes suits to order for $15 or $20 and takes them back at the end of thirty days at half price for a similar suit made new.

Small stuffed birds of brilliant plumage are now worn on the left shoulder. One lady, who forgot her canary and left it starve to death, had it mounted and wore it with a black costume.

The town of Hailey, I. T., founded in 1880, now has a $1,000 soda fountain among its evidences of civilization. The output from the mines for the present year is estimated at $5,000-000.

Edison, the inventor, claims to have built a railroad at Menlo Park three miles long, on which he ran, at the rate of forty-two miles an hour, an electric motor and carried six or eight freight cars.

Last year the people of Paris consumed 107,426,000 gallons of wine. Every man, woman and child drank forty-seven gallons. There is very little alcohol, however, in the wine they drink.

In Troy, N. Y., about 3,000,000 dozen collars and cuffs are annually manufactured. The sales reach $4,200,000 annually; the wages paid $2,184,000. The number of employes in the factories is 2,352; outside, 3,800. The annual sales in the shirt business reach $1,684,320; the manufacture in dozens, 280,720; the wages paid, $701,800, and the number of employes 4,630. Girls working on shirts average $7 or $8 per week.

A SYSTEM OF NEGLECT.

The present state of the Lakefield dam is a specific instance of the system of general neglect which the Dominion Government inflicts upon the Trent Navigation scheme. The work on the Lakefield dam is not being pushed, and, the most favorable season being neglected, there will be an excuse for another delay next winter. The engineer in charge of these and contiguous waters seems to regard the progress of work and the convenience of the public with the most supreme indifference. It is, perhaps, not altogether the fault of the engineer. It really looks as though he were only carrying out the instructions of the Government, who seem, by their course of action, to aim at disgusting the people of this district, and destroying the hope of ever receiving further assistance. In that event the Government will be saved the trouble of putting off with plausible excuses too importunate deputations. At the same time, however, at the approach of a general election, the question of the extension of Trent Valley Navigation will bob up serenely under the wing of the Government. Immense promises will be made, and, of course, be carried out in the same manner as those of the past have been.

Lakefield.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

A NARROW ESCAPE.

On Tuesday afternoon, Messrs. J. Cox and G. Baptie were out sailing in their canoe on the lake above the village, they upset in a large weed bed some distance from shore. The weeds prevented them swimming, while the canoe, which was a small one, would not support them. Fortunately some of the men connected with some of the drives heard their calls for assistance, and put out, and rescued them when almost exhausted; they received every attention at the cookery, and are now none the worse for their dip.

NEW GRIST MILL.

The water has been run out of the raceway and workmen are employed on the foundation of the new grist mill to be erected by R. & G. Strickland. The shutting out of the water will for the next week or ten days stop Messrs. Gemmel & McKee's woolen factory and Messrs. Baptie's and Chapman Bro.'s factories. The present would have been the time to finish the Lakefield dam and prevent another stoppage of the works in the fall, but the engineer in charge does not care how much trouble he causes to local property holders as long as it gives him a chance to show his authority and display the arrogance which characterizes the management of the Trent Valley works for the last two years.

POLICE COURT.

John Hall, Esq., J. P., had a couple of Italians up before him on Tuesday evening, on complaint of the village road master for for abuse and refusing to pay their poll tax. They at first refused to pay the amount with the costs, but when Constable Cochrane produced the bracelets, the sum required was produced, and the county boarding house will have two less guests.

BATHING.

Quite a number of complaints are being made about the conduct of young men who go in bathing at the wharf in the daytime, especially about the men connected with the noon train. The village constable will attend to them for the future.

CAMPING PARTIES.

It is astonishing the large number of camping parties that are now up our back lakes for a week or two's rest or amusement. Both the steamers Cruiser and Fairy take up a full complement every trip, and for the past week have often made two round trips; while a number of private parties who wish to charter the boats for a day or two have to wait their turn. Parties from Guelph, London, Toronto, Ottawa and Kingston to whom your correspondent has spoken, who are up in Stony Lake for the first time, express their delight with the surroundings and sport, and express their intention of again spending their holidays on the "old camp ground." If the parties in charge of the waters between Lakefield and Clear Lake would only carry out the promised reforms, so that the tourists would not be afflicted with so many delays, many more would take advantage of the opportunities offered, and Stony Lake would be second to none as a summer resort.

The "Tea Cost" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w-1y

From Peterborough to Oregon.

What a Peterborough Traveller Saw.

We left Peterborough on Thursday, June 25th, at 7.30, and arrived in Toronto at 11 a.m. After leaving Toronto we passed over a very rough tract of land, and arrived in St. Thomas at 6 p.m., We then travelled through Essex, a beautiful, level country, heavily timbered. The land in Essex appears to lie very low, as there were great ponds of water on each side of the track. The crops all looked well and farmers were all busy working at their hay. We then travelled on for many miles, and about twilight we saw the lights of the city of Detroit dimly shining in the distance. We crossed the Detroit river in the train on the steamboat at 9 p.m. We then passed through a level, rich and fertile part of Michigan. The crops were the best we had seen. The buildings

WERE NOT SO NUMEROUS AS IN CANADA.

In many places we saw the stacks where the grain of the previous year had been threshed.

We arrived in Chicago at 8 a.m., and left for St. Paul's at 11.30. The first place worthy of note is Wisconsin, a town of about one thousand inhabitants. Four miles further on is Milwaukee. We remained there about thirty minutes, during which we had a very heavy storm of rain. After passing a number of small stations we arrived in St. Paul at 6.30. This city, the capital of Minnesota, is picturesquely situated at the head of steamboat navigation, on the Mississippi river. Among the noted buildings are the City Market, State Capitol, Postoffice and Custom House, all situated on Wabasha street. The principal hotels are the Metropolitan, Merchants and Windsor. Population, eighty thousand.

Minneapolis, ten miles from St. Paul; inhabitants, eighty thousand. The St. Anthony rapids, upon which the prosperity of Minneapolis is mainly founded, have a perpendicular height of 18 feet, and the Mississippi has a rapid descent of 82 feet. Anoka is twenty miles from Minneapolis, and contains 4,000 inhabitants. Twenty miles further is Big Lake station, deriving its name from the beautiful sheet of water on which it is situated.

Bedker and Clear Lake station afford outlets to a

RICH FARMING AND GRAZING REGION,

which stretches away on both sides of the Mississippi for many miles of its course, and where a large quantity of wheat and dairy products are shipped to the markets of Minneapolis and St. Paul. Sunk rapids, 75 miles north-west of St. Paul. This place is important on account of its extensive beds of granite. Other stations are, Rices, Royalton and Little Falls.

We then enter the state of Dakota. After passing a number of stations, we arrive at Brainard, 136 miles from St. Paul; population 7,000. Brainerd, city of the pines, is situated on the east bank of the Mississippi river. It is the gateway to the vast lumber region, north and east to the source of the Mississippi.

Motley, 158 miles west of St. Paul: Motley has two hotels, a school house, church, and a newspaper. Seven miles further on we come to Staple Mills. The inhabitants are engaged in lumbering, cutting wood, railroad ties, etc.

Yendale: this valley is twenty miles in length, by five or six in breadth, and consists of a number of small prairies or openings, so admirably arranged by nature that almost every settler has timber and prairie.

Fargo is situated on the west bank of the Red river; Casselton 20 miles west of Fargo. This is a thriving, bustling town, being situated in the midst of one of the finest wheat raising districts in Dakota.

Oriska is surrounded by thousands of acres of fertile prairie dotted with many lakes of pure water and a more desirable could scarcely be found. Valley City lies in a deep valley surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills which rise to a height of 125 feet on every side of it.

FARMING AND STOCK-RAISING COUNTRY

Rekelson is situated on Lake Rekelson, a lovely sheet of water. The land is high and rolling and the soil is rich. Jamestown is excellently situated in a rich agricultural region on the east bank of James river, surrounded by ranges of handsomely sloping hills. Yappan is one of the handsomest small stations on the line of the railroad.

Bismark, the capital of Dakota, is situated on the east bank of the Missouri. Its landing is one of the finest on the great river Sims and is in the midst of a good coal region, and the people are mainly engaged in mining. At Fryburg the train suddenly leaves the beautiful rolling prairie and enters a long cut in a down grade, presently emerging upon a region, the startling appearance of which will keep the vision alert until the little Missouri river is reached.

Fourteen miles distant are the Bad Lands, sometimes called Pyramid Park, which show that the mighty forces of water and fire fiercely battling have wrought a scene of strange confusion. Buttes, from 50 to 150 feet in height, with rounded summits and steep sides, variegated by broad horizontal bands of color, stand closely crowded together. After leaving Little Missouri the country westward becomes less rough. Sentinel buttes is a prominent object on the left hand, not far from the track. This region abounds with buffaloes. One mile further on the is crossed. The line is marked by a tall pole, upon which is nailed a fine pair of antlers. The railroad for the next 30 miles passes over a fine prairie plateau, which is watered by many small running streams. It then traverse six miles of broken country.

Beach, this is the first station of the railroad in Montana.

Yellow Stone Valley. The railroad follows up the Yellow Stone Valley for a distance of 340 miles. Its waters, unlike those of the Missouri, are clear and bright. It wends from side to side of the valley, and along most of its course westward presents a very picturesque appearance. The width of the Yellow Stone Valley scarcely exceeds three miles, sometimes it narrows to not more than two, and again it widens to seven.

Glendive is the terminus of the Missouri division, and the beginning of Yellow Stone. Glendive occupies a broad plain, which slopes gently towards the river and is sheltered by a range of curiously shaped clay buttes, distant about half a mile from the stream and rising abruptly to a height of nearly 300 feet above its level.

Iron Bluff, this is the first station on the the Yellow Stone division. It is situated at the junction of the Tongue and Yellowstone rivers, and is surrounded by an excellent grasing country. Rosebud is situated at the mouth of Rosebud river. The extensive valley of this stream is admirably adapted to cattle raising, and its plains are dotted with settlements. Pompey's Pillar is a mass of yellow sandstone, rising abruptly to a height of 400 feet, its base covering an acre of ground. The Crow Indian reservation stretches along Yellowstone for 200 miles, and has an average width of 75 miles. As the train passed through the Yellowstone valley we saw herds of cattle contentedly grasing on the russet hills. These cattle are kept in hand by a number of herders, picturesquely garbed in sombreros, gray shirts and buckskin breeches; each man being armed with rifle, revolvers, bowie knife and rawhide whip, and mounted on a wiry pony. A number of these boarded our train while we were stopped at the station, which made some of the passengers feel as though they were placed in a rather dangerous position. They had about seventy-five horses, all saddled and tied near the station. In passing up the valley, westward of Billings, there is a view from the car windows which combines more striking features of beauty and grandeur than could hardly be found elsewhere. Beyond the smiling valley and the glistening river, to the westward and southward, rise covered with snow.

Hunter Springs: these celebrated hot springs are situated at the foot of Crazy Mountain.

Livingstone: near this point the main line makes its third and last crossing of the Yellowstone river. After leaving Livingstone the railroad runs for twelve miles, from the valley of the Yellowstone to the approach of the Beseman tunnel. The tunnel pierces the mountains, a distance of 3,500 feet, at an elevation of 5,572 feet above the sea. After leaving Bozeman the road continues westward for about thirty miles through the beautiful Gallative Valley. There are many farms, but no large villages in this part of the route.

Townsend is situated in a large and fertile valley of the Missouri. Helena is surrounded by mountains rising one above the other, until the more distant are lost among the clouds, forming a which is visible from every part of the city. About nineteen miles from Helena the main range of the Rocky Mountains is crossed by the railroad, at the Milan Pass. Here there is a tunnel 3,850 feet in length.

Missoula is beautifully situated at the western gateway of the Rocky Mountains, and commands a lovely view of the valley and surrounding mountain ranges, that stretch away as far as the eye can see. Fourteen miles from Missoula, the road enters the Coriacan Defile, and crosses the Marent Gulch by means of a trestle bridge, 866 feet in length, and 226 feet in height. The track follows no valley, but proceeds along the face of hills which are covered with fir, pines, and tamarack, down into the valley of York river.

Paradise Valley and Horse Plains, two small and charming valleys, now appear to vary the fine mountain views. There are prairies containing townships of fertile land, situated in the midst of very wild scenery. High mountains stand around and lend the warmth of spring, while their sides are white with snow. After passing Thompson's prairie we travel on for fifty miles, and then ends the Rocky Mountain division, and the Pend d'Oreille division begins. Cabinet Landing: At this point of the river, is confined in a rocky gorge, through which it dashes at tremendous speed. The columnar rocks that hem in the torrent are from 100 to 150 feet in height. Their brows crowned with pines and the romantic wilderness of the gorge is of surpassing beauty. The Northern Pacific Railway passes over a very narrow strip of Northern Idaho.

Lake Pend de'Oreillie, a beautiful lake, may be likened to a broad and winding valley among the mountains filled to the brim with gathering waters. Reaching the lake, the railroad crosses the mouth of the Pack River on a trestle one and a half miles in length and skirts the northern shore for upwards of 20 miles. The shores are mountainous, but wherever there is a bit of beach it is COVERED WITH DENSE FOREST.

The view of the lake, from the car windows, with its beautiful islands and its arms reaching into the surrounding ranges, is superb. The whole length of the lake, following its course and windings, must be nearly sixty miles. In some places it is fifteen miles wide and others it narrows to three.

Cocolala station derived its euphonious Indian name from the bright sheet of water which lies near the track. On approaching the lake a charming view of wave, wood and mountain will be caught. But we are passing out of wonderland. Mountains no longer seem to overtop us. The train sweeps on towards the southwest, following a natural pass between the ranges, presently entering a valley a few miles wide. There is and no cultivation. The forest sometimes breakes away and gives space to open country, but there is little except continuous woods. The only improvements we saw were the railroad stations every few miles and occasionally a saw mill.

Ratdrum is the first place of importance reached after leaving Lake Pend de'Oreille. Nine miles further on the Idaho line is crossed and we are in Washington Territory. Its situation upon the gravely plains is very beautiful, looking out upon the hills with the grand roaring waterfall in its midst.

Sprague: East of Sprague timber is abundant, but not a tree is afterwards seen before the Columbia river is sighted, over 100 miles beyond Wallala Junction, 214 miles from Portland. Walla Walla is beautifully situated upon an open plain that is watered by the divided flows of the Walla Walla river. Beyond it the blue mountains stand like a wall and among the foot hills is the richest agricultural district known.

The Great Dalles of the Columbia are mountains from the Great Dalles to Dalles City. All the way the scenery is inhospitable, but surprising. To the west lies Dalles City with its background of near hills and distant mountains. Towering above all with its crown of snow is Mount Hood, 11,000 feet high. For two miles or more the Dalles river is a ferocious torrent, and you cannot weary of looking at it. For that distance the surface foams and rushes in a thousand fantastic shapes, boiling where a hidden rock stands firm—a tremendous whirlpool where there are room and depth.

From Dalles City the railroad follows the river's edge and the scene changes from treeless, desert-looking shores to mountain views which grow more interesting every mile. Along the cliffs between the Dallas and Hood river there are two tunnels. The first is approachable for half a mile directly under the face of a towering cliff, that forms one of the most interesting spectacles of the whole route. Standing on the car platform and looking up at the mighty wall the beholders receive an impression that is likely always to remain. Cascade mountains: Wooded ranges and abrupt canons favor the existence of waterfall. The railroad passes close to and almost under them as they pour over the cliffs. They passed so close that we could hear the splashing waters and catch a glimpse of the foaming waters as the train whirled by. At the Cascade the scenery is very fine. The mountains are grand standing on the south, and lifted to towering height. Soon after leaving Bonnieville a stretch of the grandest scenery of grand river is entered. Here is Oneonta Fall, 800 feet of sheet silver, a rainbow of mist waving in the wind. Here the train stopped for fifteen minutes to let the passengers view the falls. Multnomalo Fall: The water plunges several hundred feet, gathers itself together and plunges again; about 900 feet in all. A few miles westward are the Pillars of Hercules—two columns of rock several hundred feet in height, between which the train passes, as through a colossal portal, to the more open lands beyond. Soon after leaving Mt. Gorge the track diverges from the river and, passing through a forest region for about twenty miles, comes to East Portland. After crossing the Williamette, by a large ferry boat, we arrive in Portland itself, on Wednesday, the 1st of July, at 11.30. We remained in Portland till Thursday, at 9 a.m. After leaving Portland we travelled westward through an almost unbroken forest region until we reached the plains of Washington county. Leaving Washington county we enter Yamhill county, considered the choicest region in the Willamette. Yamhill has generally a rolling prairie surface. The soil is excellent, and nature has favored the country with running streams. Eight miles further we come to Suver, where our journey ends.

LIKE WALLS OF ADAMANT,

The Willamette Valley is 125 miles in length, and about 50 miles in width. The country is all we expected to find it. The crops are all looking exceedingly well. Fruit is abundant. The orchards on some farms are as large as ten and twenty acres, and sometimes larger. Father purchased a farm of three hundred and sixty-eight acres, and is highly pleased with the country.

PRACTICAL ADVICE

—TO—

YOUNG MEN

By an Eminent Divine

THE REV. DE WITT TALMAGE SAYS:—"How a man with no surplus of estate, but still enough money to pay the Premium of a Life Insurance Policy, can refuse to do it, and then look his children in the face and say his prayers at night, on going to bed, expecting them to be answered, is a mystery to me that I have never yet been able to fathom. Procrastination is the Devil's deception." Go to-morrow morning and pay for a Policy.

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter IV—Continued.

"Some time—some months," she replied.

"I saw you in the spring at Turin—in church, at San Giovanni." She raised her eyes and met mine with a strange puzzled look.

"You were there with your old servant—one morning," I continued.

"Yes—we often went there."

"You are English I suppose—your name is not an Italian one?"

"Yes, I am English."

She spoke as though not quite certain about it—or as if it was a matter of complete indifference.

"Your home is here—you are not going back to Italy?"

"I don't know—I cannot tell."

Pauline's manner was very unsatisfying. I made many attempts to learn something about her habits and tastes. Did she play or sing—was she fond of music, of pictures, of flowers, of the stage, of traveling? Had she many relations and friends? Directly or indirectly, I asked her all these questions.

Her replies were unsatisfactory. Either she evaded the questions, as if determined I should know nothing about her, or she did not seem to understand them. Many of them I felt sure puzzled her. At the end of our little promenade she remained as great a mystery to me as before. The only comfort I could take was that she displayed no wish to shun me. We passed and repassed the house several times, but she did not suggest re-entering, as she might have done had she wished to get rid of me. There was no trace of coquetry in her manner—quiet and reserved as I found her, she was at least simple and natural—and she was very beautiful, and I was very, very much in love!

It was not long before I discovered that old Teresa's black eyes were watching us from behind the blind of the drawing-room. She must have crept from her bed to see that her charge got into no mischief. I chafed at the espionage, but as yet it was too early to escape from it.

Before Teresa could hobble out of doors I had met Pauline more than once in the same way. She seemed, I was glad to believe, pleased when I joined her. The difficulty I labored under was to make her talk. She would listen to all I had to say without comment and without reply, save yes, or no. If, by a rare chance, she asked a question or spoke a longer sentence than usual the effort was never sustained. I attributed a great deal of this to shyness and to her secluded life—for the only person she had to speak to was that terrible old Teresa.

Although every word and action of Pauline's told me she was well-educated and well-bred, I was certainly surprised at her ignorance of literature. I quoted an author, mentioned a book by name, the remark passed unnoticed; or she looked at me as if puzzled by my allusion, or distressed at her own ignorance. Although I had now seen her several times, I was not satisfied at the progress I had made. I knew I had not as yet struck the key-note of her nature.

As soon as the old servant, duenna, friend, or whatever she was, grew well, I heard some startling news. My landlady asked me if I could recommend her apartments to any friend of mine—such another as myself she was good enough to say—Miss March was going to leave, and the landlady thought she would prefer taking a gentleman in her place.

I felt certain this was a countermove of that old hag Teresa's. She had cast venomous glances at me when we passed each other on the stairs; had responded surlily when I asked her if she had quite recovered from the effects of her accident—in a word, I knew she was my enemy; that she had discovered my feelings toward Pauline and was doing her best to keep us apart. I had no means of knowing the extent of her power or influence over the girl, but I had some time since ceased to regard her as nothing more than a servant. The intelligence that my fellow-lodgers were about to quit showed me that to bring my love for Pauline to a successful issue, I must in some way make matters straight with this unpleasant old attendant.

That same evening, as I heard her coming down the stairs, I threw open my door and stood face to face with her.

"Signora Teresa," I said, with high-flown politeness, "will it please you to step into my room? I wish to speak to you."

She gave me a quick suspicious glance, but nevertheless complied with my request. I closed the door and placed a chair for her.

"Your poor knee—is it quite well?" I asked sympathetically, and in Italian.

"It is quite well," she replied laconically.

"Will you take a glass of sweet wine? I have some here."

Teresa, in spite of our inimical relations, made no objection, so I filled a glass and watched her sip it approvingly.

"Is the Signorina—Miss March well? I have not seen her to-day."

"She is well."

"It is about her I wish to speak to you—you have guessed that?"

"I have guessed it." As she spoke Teresa gave me a sullen, defiant look.

"Yes," I continued, "your vigilant, faithful eyes have seen what I have no wish to conceal. I love the Signorina Pauline."

"She is not to be loved," said Teresa, sullenly.

"One so beautiful must be loved. I love her and will marry her."

"She is not to be married."

"Listen, Teresa. I say I will marry her. I am a gentleman and rich. I have 50,000 lire a year."

The amount of my income, magnificent when reduced to her native coinage, was not without its expected effect. If her eyes, as they met mine, were as unfriendly as ever, their look of astonishment and increasing respect told me I was appealing to her tenderest feeling—cupidity.

"Now tell me why I should not marry the signorina? Tell me who her friends are that I may see them and ask her in marriage?"

"She is not for marriage."

This was all I could get from the old woman. She would tell me nothing about Pauline's family or friends. She would only reiterate that she was not for love or for marriage.

I had but one chance left. Teresa's eager look when I mentioned the income I possessed had impressed me. I must condescend to the vulgar act of direct bribery; the end would justify the means.

As I was so often traveling it was my habit to carry a large sum of money on my person. I drew out my pocket-book and counted out a hundred pounds in new crisp notes. Teresa eyed them hungrily.

"You know what these are worth?" I said. She nodded. I pushed a couple of the notes toward her. Her skinny hand seemed twitching with the desire to grasp them.

"Tell me who Miss March's friends are and take these two notes; all the rest shall be yours on the day we are married."

The old woman sat silent for awhile, but I knew temptation was assailing her. Presently I heard her murmuring, "50,000 lire! 50,000 lire a year!" The spell worked. At last she rose. "Are you going to take the money?" I asked.

"I cannot. I dare not. I am bound. But——"

A lady in New York City has just finished a silk quilt composed of 14,000 pieces, each about the size of a 10-cent piece. The pieces are hexagonal, and there are on an average ten stitches on each of the six sides, which makes the total number of stitches 420,000. It has taken Mrs. Collins seven years to make this quilt, working on it during her spare hours. It has been valued by a dry-goods house on Broadway at $500 or $600

FRIDAY, JULY 31, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Riverside Park.

Don't fail to be in attendance at Riverside Park to-morrow afternoon, to see Sullivan wind the ball around the Bethany's. Admission 15 cents. Ladies free.

Just Received.

A lot of Linen Damask, Table Cloths and Napkins, various sizes; slightly imperfect but cheap. J. Erskine. d48-6in.

Police Court.

This morning at the Police Court John Strain was brought up on remand, charged with being drunk. On promising the Magistrate to reform for the future he was allowed to go.

Reporter for the County Court.

The County Council have decided to make a grant of $35 per session towards securing the services of a shorthand reporter, to record the proceedings of the County Court.

Resuming Practice.

Dr. G. Sterling Ryerson, having returned from service as surgeon of the Royal Grenadiers, with the North-West Field Force, has resumed the practice of the special branches of the profession—Eye, Ear, Throat and Nasal Diseases.

Lacrosse.

Mr. W. A. Sanderson returned from Brockville yesterday, where he refereed the match which took place on Wednesday between the Cornwall and Brockville lacrosse teams. The match was won by the former team by a score of three to one, which makes them the possessors of the intermediate championship.

Prob'e Weather Premises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Light to moderate winds, mostly north and west; continued fine weather. Not much change in temperature.

A Busy Builder.

The contract for the brickwork of the new stove foundry building has been awarded to Mr. J. J. Hartley, builder and contractor, who is also the successful tenderer for the erection of the lock works building. Over three-quarters of a million of brick will be used in these buildings, and in fifteen houses, the brickwork of which has been done by Mr. Hartley this season, about 400,000 bricks have been used. Mr. Hartley has won so an high a reputation for the excellence of his work, apparently building in the solidity and probity of his character with his brickwork, that it is no wonder that he is kept busy every season.

Niagara Falls Excursion.

In remembering the grand excursion of the firemen to Niagara Falls don't forget that the date has been changed to August 11th—Tuesday—on account of Monday the 10th being the day for voting on two important by-laws. In addition to the grand attractions of the excursion already printed by the EXAMINER, we have the pleasure of informing excursionists that the local firemen have made arrangements by which excursionists, at reduced rates, can visit the grand firemen's tournament in Buffalo on the dates of the excursion, August 11th and 12th. The tickets are good for three days and the excursionists can both see the sights at the Falls, and pay a visit to Buffalo. The tournament has a splendid programme of events and will be well worth a visit. This new attraction makes the firemens' excursion to Niagara Falls on the Civic Holiday, August 11th, a grand event which few will care to miss. Tickets, round trip, only $2.50; to Toronto and return only $3.00. Remember the date, Tuesday, August 11th.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Base Ball.

Go over to Riverside Park to morrow afternoon, when the Bethanys meet the home nine in a return match, and see a good exhibition of the ball game. O'Neil will preside behind the bat to catch Sullivan's twisters. Admission 15 cents. Ladies free.

Race at the Lansdowne.

To-night the regular fortnightly race will take place at the Lansdowne rink. Shevlin, Loch and Logan are expected to toe the scratch, besides a number of other noted flyers. The Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance. Admission, seats 10 cents, ladies 5 cents.

Roller Skating.

The second exhibition of roller skating by Miss Jessie Warts was given last evening at the Lansdowne Rink. Her graceful evolutions called forth much applause from the audience, and the many difficult feats performed by her were wonderful. Miss Warts is one to draw a large house if she visits Peterborough again.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.

The Scott Act.

Mr. G. E. Williams, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., received a letter to-day from Mr. G. Powell, of Ottawa, Assistant Secretary of State, acknowledging receipt of Mr. Williams' letter, transmitting petition that the Scott Act be submitted to a vote in this county.

Another Excursion.

The A. O. U. Workmen, of Perth, intend running an excursion to Peterborough on Thursday, Aug. 13th. The local committee of the brethren of the order here are making complete arrangements to provide for the reception of the visitors, and to extend the visitors the hospitalities of the town in a most cordial manner.

The Coming Circus.

At the council meeting last night the clerk was authorized to prepare a by-law, if such thing could be done, to charge the coming circus the sum of $100 for street parade. here on August 13th. Councillor McNaughton held that if elephants, camels, etc., paraded through our streets, and over our bridges, their owners should be made pay for such perambulations.

Exempt From Taxation.

At the meeting of the town council, held last night, the by-laws exempting the Peterborough Lock Works and Dixon estate from taxation for a period of ten years were passed. This action of the council is most commendable and should encourage other enterprising citizens to make such improvements as will tend to be profitable to themselves and beneficial to the working class of the town.

Our National Game.

Mr. G. H. Giroux, secretary of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, yesterday received official notice that the Shamrocks and Ontarios would positively make their appearance here on August 10th. This date has been selected in obedience to the wishes of several merchants on George street, as well as a large number of influential ratepayers. Excursions will be run from Belleville and all along the line of the G.J.R., and the biggest "day" ever held in Peterborough will take place.

Personal.

Mr. Max Hamilton on Thursday contributed 5 to the total score of 178 which "Ontario" piled up againgt "Quebec" in the inter-provincial cricket match, Toronto.

Mr. A. F. Trickey, the genial and enterprising representative of Chamberlain & Co., Prescott, proprietary medicines and cigars, was in town yesterday and went north this morning on a tour of the lake country.

The Opposing Forces.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 29.—The Swet, the Russian military organ, says that the Afghan force on the Russo-Afghan frontier is 20,000 men and that the Russian force consists of thirty companies situated between Penjdeh and Zulficar.

Steel Threshing Machine Teeth

The cylinder and concave teeth of a threshing machine are a very important feature. If they are made of soft iron they soon wear out, then the grain is not all taken from the straw; if too hard, they break and cause delay and expense. Norway and Low-moor iron have been used for this purpose, but while tough and strong soon wore round at the points. The Hall Works have been experimenting for years to get a strong and hard tooth; they tested many kinds of both American and English steel, but until this year never have succeeded in obtaining what was requisite for a first-class tooth—one that would thresh stones, horse-shoes and hay forks without breaking, and at the same time have a hard wearing surface. They have secured a brand of steel that fully meets the demand, of which they have just received a full car load of nearly twelve tons made specially for them—enough for 75,000 teeth. These steel teeth have three times the tensile strength of the best iron, and can be doubled cold without, in the least degree, even cracking the skin of the steel. We have seen some specimens of the teeth bent cold in all shapes, which, to us, seem most remarkable. They are sold at the same price as iron.

The Joseph Hall Machine Works has just issued an Illustrated Machine Tooth Circular containing full sized cuts of all teeth used in their machines which is sent free to all applicants.—Reformer, July 24.

The Court House Park.

The Regulations Drafted by the Horticultural Society.

A meeting of the directors of the Horticultural Society was held yesterday afternoon at the Bank of Toronto, when the committee appointed to draft by-laws for the governance of the Court House Park submitted proposed rules, which were approved by the Society, and if ratified by the Town Council will be adopted. Under these all that portion of the grounds east of the fountain will be accessible to the public, who will be allowed to walk or sit on the grass and under the trees thereon, but on the grass west of the fountain no one will be allowed to walk, and no scattering of paper or other litter will be permitted. When the rules have been approved by the council, notices calling attention to them will be posted at the park entrance. Owners of dogs doing any damage to the grounds will be held responsible for it. It would be well if the Society would make some regulation as to the hour at which the park will be closed to the public. Respectable persons would not be likely to frequent the grounds after 9:30, and as loose characters might otherwise infest them it seems desirable that after that hour the police should have authority to eject persons found lounging round.

Capt. Kidd's Treasure.

Mrs. Mary Cleaves, a bright-eyed, dark-haired, chatty little woman of middle age, writes a Portland, Me., correspondent of The St. Louis Globe-Democrat, recently resumed her labor of searching for the hidden treasure of Oversel. She believes the gold of Capt. Kidd is on Oversel Island, and that she is about to find it. Her work, which commenced some months ago, was interrupted by the winter snows. She has a rod of magical powers. "You spoke of the rod," said she this morning; "yes, it has a history, which I will tell you," laying down her shovel and pick. "In the first place, these rods are often unreliable. I tried several, but they all proved false. One day this one (eyeing it affectionately) came to me from New York. It is two hundred years old, and is true blue. Why, when I first took it up a severe shock of electricity passed through me. My work was half-done. Wonderful wand! With this rod I can overcome any obstacle, great or small, and mind you, it has a strong affinity between heavenly and earthly things. I told you it was true; it is every time. One day, when I was prospecting on the island, I came across a large rock. On that rock was distinctly marked the letter "C." That "C" meant "Cleaves," but I did not learn it until afterward. I placed the rod near the rock, and it indicated that there was something below. I could neither believe my eyes nor the rod for some moments. I was bound to satisfy myself thoroughly, so I stepped back a few rods, tied my rod to the ground, and rested upon it. Strange to say, it broke its fastenings, turned me completely around, and pointed directly to the place first indicated. Then I was satisfied. So you see I have labored hard, searching everywhere with my rod and digging in thousands of places with my shovel and almost for nothing. But I realize that my work is nearly over now. I shall astonish the natives in the spring. Until then good-by."

And Mrs. Cleaves took up her pick and shovel and started for the shore.

John Pender, presiding at a meeting of the Globe Telegraph Company at London, Friday, referred to the crisis in Atlantic cable affairs, and said he trusted the competing companies would effect an agreement which would be of advantage to shareholders.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitting pair of pants that will feel as comfortable as a woollen mit, leave your order at the Serious Accident.

A G. T. R. Brakeman Crushed Between the Cars.

A serious accident occurred about 1 o'clock to-day at the Grand Trunk station. A brakeman named Thomas Gullett, who lives at Roblin's Mills, in Prince Edward County, was engaged in coupling cars, when he, by some means, got caught between the buffers of two cars that were coming together slowly, and was severely crushed in the lower [illegible] conveyed to the C. P. R. Hotel, on Simcoe street, where his injuries, which are of a most serious character, were attended to by Dr. King.

Let There Be Light.

Mr. James Stevenson has received a 1,100 candle power gas lamp which is to be located in the Court House Park. It will be placed in position in a few days.

Jammed Between Coal Cars.

Yesterday, Mr. Charles Hurley, a brakeman on the Toronto mixed, who boards at Mr. Stutt's, Charlotte street, when in town, was severely squeezed between two coal cars which he was coupling. The frames of this kind of cars come very close together, and as Mr. Hurley was inserting the pin he was jammed by the approaching ends so severely that he was seized with vomiting blood, and he was sent back to Toronto, though his home is in Sunderland. It will be some time before he is able to take his "run" again.

Where Huckleberries Grow.

WHITE HILL HOUSE, ANSTRUTHER, JULY 27th, 1885.

DEAR EXAMINER,—I know there are lots of your subscribers would like to know where they would get plenty of berries. Well, in the south-east corner of the township of Methuen, there is a good patch; it is about seven miles long and five or six wide. There are hundreds of people picking huckleberries there now. There will be thousands of bushels that will go to loss. I went last Wednesday, and brought my wife and four children with me in the waggon. We saw people camped out; some slept under their waggons. We went to an old lumber camp, and put the team in the stable, and got a scythe and cut beaver hay for them and for our beds. So we got a fire lit, and got our dinner, and it was four o'clock when we got to picking. We picked 33 quarts of very fine ones that evening. My wife thought it better to sleep in the old lumber shanty, and hang the tent for a door to keep the bears out at night, so I let her have her way. My boys caught twenty fish while we were getting breakfast ready, but one big one took away the hook. There is a man by the name of Hoard that keeps a boarding house in the middle of the berry patch, he has stables and pasture. They had a dance the night I was there, they had a fife, drum and fiddle. We could hear the drum where we were camped. We left the next day at 11 o'clock. We picked nine patent pails or 90 quarts and put them in an old salt barrel, and the juice ran out like wine; a good staunch barrel that will not let them run out is the best. We saw a man from the Township of Lake picking berries and he told me he was picking them for sale. He and his son picked seven days last year and sold $35 worth for cash to peddlers. He has been selling them this year for 50c. a pail or ten quarts for 50c.; they are down now to 25c. a pail. I saw one man had gathered 40 or 50 pails, he had them in boxes in a waggon and was taking them to Cobourg to sell.

Yours, JOHN YOUNG.

P. S.—A good team could go from Peterborough in one day; feed at Burleigh, 21 miles; feed at Apsley, 20 miles. Go on the Wellington road east out of Apsley for seven miles to William Bullied's corner, then down south five miles on the Norwood road. The road is all good except two miles south of Gott's lumber shanty. The Belmont council ought to make Messrs. Gilmour, lumbermen, fix it, as they spoiled it, carrying in staff for the shanties.

RIEL'S TRIAL.

The Case Being Submitted to the Jury.

Riel Delivers an Address.

He Asserts that he is not Insane.

REGINA, July 31.—In the Riel trial to-day the evidence was concluded this evening by calling Capt. Young, Gen. Middleton, and the prison guard, to rebut the expert evidence of insanity. Mr. Fitzpatrick addressed the jury for the defence.

RIEL'S ADDRESS.

Riel followed with an hour's speech in English. He denied in the strongest terms that he was insane, and brought many curious arguments in proof. He said he did not believe he was insane when in Beauport Asylum, and wondered they did not bring the Superintendent of the Longue Point Asylum. He was there also. Years ago he had received a letter from Bishop Bourget, of Quebec, telling him that to fulfil, and always he believed it, and would fulfil it yet. He said God had governed all his movements, and was with him in the box, and would guide the jury and court to his acquittal. He was at times strangely eloquent in speaking of the wrong the Halfbreeds had suffered.

HE HAD A MISSION

HE PRAYED IN THE BOX

to God to give him strength and direct him. When he was born, said he, he was powerless. His mother shielded him, and he lived. He had another mother—the North-West—who would as he was cared for when born. He would live speaking of the suffering Halfbreeds. Said they had no voice in the Government of the North-West. The Council was not representative, and being generated by the Federal Government, that Government was also,

CARE FOR HIM NOW

NOT REPRESENTATIVE

and responsible. His (Riel's) counsel tried to make out that he being insane was not responsible. Therefore, if the Government was irresponsible it is insane, and it was insanity complicated with paralysis. He said

HE HAD ABSOLUTE CONFIDENCE

the jury would acquit him. Riel labored under a sort of subdued excitement which seemed to choke his utterances at times; but chosen, and emphatically and even eloquently spoken. The question with the jury is likely to be not "is the man insane," but "is he responsible." Mr. Robinson closed the case for the crown, and Judge Richardson was engaged in his address to the jury when the Court rose.

HIS LANGUAGE WAS WELL

SHEEP-RAISING IN TEXAS.

Dipping Sheep According to Law—The Relative Profits of Different Breeds—Identifying Lost Sheep.

We now have our sheep in as good shape for the coming Winter as we know how to treat them. The last dipping until Spring [illegible] has been given them.

"Dipping" is a laborious and in other respects unpleasant task. It is as much a pa[illegible] of the routine of a shepherd's duties as shearing, with the difference that its comes oftener. It is a preventive as well as a cure of a disease known as scab. Scab is as contagious among sheep as small-pox in the human family. It is as bad as the itch in the district school. In fact it belongs to the itch family. Sheep men are required by law to dip their sheep. The obligation of the law is observed with about the same reverence as are your licenses, prohibition and local option laws at the North.

What "dipping" is done is from a motive of self-interest on the part of the owner. The shiftless and the lazy will not attend to their flocks in their own interest, and consequently are not expected to have a greater interest in a statute of Texas than they have in their own bread and butter. The parasite is allowed to burrow in the cuticle of the poor sheep's back. The victim is constantly seeking relief by rubbing against all the mesquit bushes he can find, scratching out wool at each rub, until, when shearing time comes, the thriftless owner looks first at the sheep and then at the mesquit, seriously pondering which has the most wool, and which would give the best results in shearing, the sheep or the bushes.

The old school of sheepmen baptise the animal in a decoction of tobacco, but the new school use some of the combinations of carbolic acid or sulphur. The operation is to seize the animal and douse him entirely in the prepared bath, save his head, and then let him stand for a moment on a plank where drainage of his fleece will run back into the vat.

It is a simple enough operation as applied to one animal, but when repeated a thousand or more times it becomes as monotonous as washing dishes. I am always glad when "dipping" is over.

Abilene, Taylor county, located on the Texas Pacific, is our market for our wool. Indeed, the town has become quite a wool center. The sheep business is now suffering as much from low prices as wheat culture. Wool has been sold as low as 9 cents per pound. Please contemplate the fact of a pound of wool being worth a trifle less than a pound of cotton. Under such circumstances nothing but force of habit would cause a manufacturer to mix cotton in his woolen goods.

Such prices can not be due to either a horizontal or a perpendicular tariff, but lies somewhere between overproduction and underconsumption.

There is, however, a great difference in the quality of wool. That from the Mexican sheep is straight and hairy. From long haphazard breeding and pot-luck care, the animals have a tendency to become goat-like in habit of [illegible] from a Merino, or a Merino grade, is kinky, but silk-like in texture. The difference in the profit of the two breeds is very marked. As marked and apparent as is the difference, one just engaging in the business—particularly if he is a "tender-foot"—is quite as apt to take the wrong course as the right one, usually a little more so. The money that will buy 1,000 Merinos will buy 2,500 Mexican sheep.

One of the most common mistakes a novice makes in about every thing is a desire to do a big thing. Size is everything to him, at the expense of quality. To him a sheep is a sheep, and the greatest number of noses that can be had for a given amount of money is the best bargain.

The Merinos require a little more care that the Mexicans. It lies more in the direction of vigilance and thoughtfulness than in any money expense. The difference in the amount and value of the wool is about 75 per cent in favor of the Merino, and the difference in the increase of the flock about as much more, making a total advantage on the side of the Merino of about 150 per cent.

The general appearance and general culture of the average sheep-herder do not possess many attractions to people of refined society. It is not best to have too great contempt for the poor fellow. There are a few things that have come within the lines of his restricted life that he knows just a little better than anybody else. His experience has all been in sheep society. These he has mingled with day in and day out for years, and he knows them all, their habits and individual peculiarities to a fraction. To a casual observer a thousand sheep have no more individuality than a thousand peas or flies. Not so with the expert sheepherder.

Politicians and drummers having the power to recall names and faces to a high degree are sometimes spoken of as prodigies. I doubt if there are any in these professions whose memory can command more of their constituency than can the sheep-herder of his.

If by accident one of his flock shall become mixed with another of a thousand in number, he can go among them and identify the one strayed from the fold with unerring certainty. He identifies mainly by the expression of the face. Mexican herdsmen are particularly expert in this. When on a drive, he knows exactly what sheep will be in the lead and what will be on the right of the trail and on the left and in the rear. They seem to have idiosyncracies of character like ourselves. There are the bold and the timid, the contrary and the obedient, the provident and the improvident and others. If there is a chance for an accident, are quite certain to fall foul of the opportunity.

Just now a good peanut stand on a cash basis is of more profit than a sheep ranch; but there is a process of the survival of the fittest going on. Many are going out of the business voluntarily; and others by the refrigerator process, and other signs are in the air indicating that the present dark lane will some day take a turn.—Texas Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

Givin' the Driver a Steer.

A very small boy with his clothes in tatters, occupied a front corner seat in one of the new Third avenue open cars last night and gazed thoughtfully straight down the street. When the car suddenly reached Ninth street the boy suddenly waked up, glanced hurried at the street-lamp, and then, touching the driver's arm, asked him what street it was. The driver vouchsafed no answer and drove majestically on.

The boy fidgeted around and seemed uneasy. A Times reporter, who sat next to him, thought the little fellow was anxious to get off, but did not do so, not knowing where he was. The reporter who heard the question and had seen how it was received thought he would do the boy a kindness, and said to him:

"Where do you want to get off, my boy? That was Ninth street we passed."

"Why de—can't yer keep your gab to yerself," politely responded the urchin, who could not have been more than 10 years old. "D'yer think I'm a gilly an' don't know not'in' about where de streets is? Can't ye tumble dat I'm only givin' de driver a steer? He's me fadder an' I'm takin' a ride fur de benefit of me healt'."

And the small boy relapsed into an indignant silence and wondered at the reporter's obtuseness.—N. Y. Times.

Nests on the Low Boughs.

The song birds nearly all build low; their cradle is not upon the tree-top. It is only birds of prey that fear danger from below more than from above, and that seek the higher branches for their nests. A line five feet from the ground would run above more than half the nests, and one ten feet would bound more than three-fourths of them. It is only the oriole and the wood pewee that, as a rule, go higher than this. The crows and jays and other enemies of the birds have learned to explore this belt pretty thoroughly. But the leaves and the protective coloring of most nests baffle them as effectually no doubt as they do the professional oologist

A DELIBERATE FALSIFIER.

We do not often have the opportunity of nailing a liar to the wall that we have in the case of Mr. McLeod. In ordinary cases, any conversation we may have with second parties is in private, and when the second party often maliciously and mendaciously distorts what we may say, we are to a certain extent in the power of our adversary. Mr. McLeod has shown himself, in the promotion of his schemes, to be an unmitigated liar, and in the present case rises head and shoulders above his former miserable notoriety in this respect. We will prove every word which Mr. McLeod writes in reference to us to be grossly false and mendacious, and shamefully tainted with the disgracefully prominent characteristic of that individual. We, ourselves positively denied the assertion of Mr. McLeod, and now, in order to prove our assertion and to consign Mr. McLeod to that depth of moral degradation to which he has stooped, we publish the following letters:

J. B. McWilliams, Esq., Peterborough:

DEAR SIR,—Mr. McLeod, in a letter in the Times of this morning, says that when he requested me to insert in the EXAMINER his clipping that I refused it, saying "it would injure the Reform party." As you were present in my office at the time, will you kindly let me have, early to-day, in writing, what you understood to be my reply to Mr. McLeod, and oblige,

Yours truly,
J. R. STRATTON.

Peterborough, July 31st, 1885.

The following is Mr. McWilliams' reply:

Mr. J. R. Stratton:

DEAR SIR,—In reply to yours of this morning, I would say that your refusal to Mr. McLeod was couched in entirely different language to that asserted by Mr. McLeod over his own signature. I would suppose that you do not require me to write you fully your reply to him, as you would no doubt well remember that yourself. You will recollect that I advised you generally to refuse publication to Mr. McLeod's contributions or clippings, as I judged from his attitude towards you that he was only seeking to lay a trap for you.

Yours, etc.,
J. B. MCWILLIAMS.

Peterborough, July 30th, 1885.

A similar letter was addressed to Mr. F. J. Jameson, who was also present during the interview in question, and the following is his reply:

Mr. Stratton

DEAR SIR,—In reply when you refused to accept for publ. tion Mr. McLeod's correspondence, I understood you to refuse it on general principles. I must emphatically assert that you did not use the language attributed to you by Mr. McLeod.

Yours, etc.,
F. J. JAMESON.

Peterborough, July 30th, 1885.

In order more sharply and more decidedly to refute and give the lie to Mr. McLeod direct and to show how utterly unreliable and incapable of belief he is we interviewed Mr. Cumming, who accompanied Mr. McLeod in his interview in our office and in the presence of Mr. E. B. Stone, barrister, Mr. Cumming said that the statement published by Mr. McLeod in the Times is utterly and absolutely untrue.

In order to gratify the vindictiveness of his disposition, there is no descent too steep for Mr. McLeod. What is one falsehood to him who revels in them? What lie is there too wretched or too ungenerous which he would not publish? His accusation against us in reference to Mr. Maloney is false and malicious and one which a man of the least probity of character or uprightness of thinking would never utter. As emanating from Mr. McLeod, the charge is in the first place tainted with the falseness and utter unreliability and untruthfulness of himself, and is then stamped on the forehead as a a lie direct, by the following letter of Mr. Moloney:

EXAMINER OFFICE,
Peterborough, Aug. 1st, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Duncan McLeod insinuates, in a letter to the Times, that you gave or promised me a sum of money or an equivalent to assist you in procuring the appointment of County Court Clerk. Kindly give me early this morning your version of the affair, and much oblige,

Yours truly,
J. R. STRATTON.

John Moloney, Esq., County Court Clerk.

MR. MOLONEY'S REPLY.

PETERBOROUGH, Aug. 1st, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—If McLeod or any person else says that I ever gave or promised you anything in the shape of money or an equivalent for your efforts in my favor he is an unadulterated superlative liar. I was supported for the position which I occupy by some of the best men the Reform party have here, and was backed by the influence of Mr. Thos. Blezard, M.P.P., East Peterborough. I do not think I owe my position to you any more than to the other good friends who so kindly assisted me. You surely do not suppose that any person in this town or county believes what Duncan McLeod would say?

Yours truly,
JOHN MOLONEY,
C. C. C.

If Mr. McLeod in private, merely followed a course of life characterized by no great love for truth, honesty of purpose, or good intention to promote the best interests of the country, in which he is allowed an unshackled place, it would not concern us, but when he assumes to take a place in public affairs, and that too, in the same party to which we have the honor to belong, we have a right to object. Since coming to Peterborough, Mr. McLeod has been a very breeding pest of dissension, and a nuisance and an incubus to the Reform party, which mistrusts and disowns him. His silly arrogance, his obliquity of moral vision, his offensiveness to the well-minded, his unreliability, make him an undesirable political associate; but when he asserts to himself a prominent place in the party and makes himself a foolish but conspicuous figure, now championing the cause and now betraying it, it is time to take him by the neck and throw him outside the party walls.

Who could trust or confide in a man who would offer to betray those secrets which exist in every political organization? We are speaking by the book when we say that the Reform party considers itself well rid of Mr. McLeod, and the next time he ventures into a Reform committee room, we are informed, his presence will be both brief and awkward and his departure the reverse of deliberate. In his lifetime, Mr. McLeod has never laid a brick in the structure of the Reform party, and when he boasts to a certain individual he has the power to turn the scale in favor of the Conservative party, he insults electors of all classes, degrades the Conservative party and stultifies himself. To imagine for a moment that Mr. McLeod could alter one intelligent vote, would be simply preposterous. Mr. McLeod, in pursuit of political ends, has so long had the run of his tether, that he has become unconscious of the fact that there is still a ring in his nose. We have always regretted, for his own sake only, his career of selfish notoriety, double dealing and petty intrigue, which have lost him the confidence and good-will of the public of every shade of political and religious opinion.

We would advise Mr. McLeod to drop writing silly pamphlets and disseminating foul, personal and political slander, which will never be of any advantage financially to him and to give his sole and undivided attention to the liquidation of the claims of 'Romanists' and others, inclusive of ourselves. If Mr. McLeod decides to clear his own sullied reputation before assailing others, he will be the meekest and least aggressive individual in the county.

English Girls and Women.

In all physical exercise, writes a correspondent, the English lass is not to be surpassed. I noticed two young girls walking in the park last week. One was perhaps 19, the other 12. At least they looked these ages, although I find that an English girl's age is not to be ascertained from her appearance. I don't attempt to explain the matter, but certain it is that when girls here look 12 and 19 they are more apt to be 15 and 23. When they are 25 and 30 they look 30 and 35, while with singular compensation matrons of 50 and 60 often look as young as their grown daughters. In one respect the English mother is more sensible than her American cousin. She keeps her girls in the nursery limits, as it were, as long as possible. This is as it should be. The years speed away fast enough without forcing the girls into womanhood too soon. In America there are too few genuine little girls. They are little old women, with haggard little dissipated doll faces, with tight stays and abbreviated skirts. An English girl remains one until long after the time that her sister on the other side of the Atlantic is married.

A Girl's Equipment for Self-Support.

No one will dispute the assertion that any given girl may some day have herself and perhaps her family to support, and yet our schemes for education for girls are framed precisely as if this were not and could not be true. As a rule, no provision whatever is made for such a contingency in the education of girls; no recognition whatever is given to the fact that the chance exists. We shut our eyes to the danger; we hope that it will never come, and we put the thought of it away from us. In brief, we trust to luck, and that is a most unwise—I was about to say an idiotic—thing to do.

Each one of us has known women to whom the mischance has happened, and each one of us knows that it may happen to the daughter whom we tenderly cherish, yet we put no arms in her hands with which to fight this danger; we equip her for every need except the sorest of all needs; we leave her at the mercy of chance, knowing that the time may come when she whom we have not taught to do any bread-winning work will have need of bread, and will know no way to get it except through dependency, beggary, or worse. She can teach? Yes, if she can find some politician to secure an appointment for her. She can prick back poverty with the point of her needle? Yes, at the rate of 75 cents a week, or, if she is a skillful needle-woman, at twice or thrice that pittance.—Harper's Monthly.

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Softening and Humanizing Effects of Suffering and Sorrow.

Saints and Conquerors Travel on a Rough and Thorny Road.

"Trifles" and "Accidents" Often the Most Important Events of Our Lives.

Text, Ruth ii., 3: "And she went and came and gleaned in the field after the reapers; and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech."

The time that Ruth and Naomi arrive at Bethlehem is harvest time. It was the custom when a sheaf fell from a load in the harvest field for the reapers to refuse to gather it up; that was left for the poor who might happen to come along that way. If there were handaful of grain scattered across the field after the main harvest had been reaped, instead of raking it as farmers do, it was, by the custom of the land, left in its place, so that the poor coming along that way might glean it and get their bread. But you say "What is the use of all these harvest fields to Ruth and Naomi? Naomi is too old and feeble to go out and toil in the sun; and can you expect that Ruth, the young and beautiful, should tan her cheeks and blister her hands in the harvest field?" Boaz owns a large farm, and he goes out to see the reapers gather in the grain. Coming there, right behind the swarthy, sun-burned reapers, he beholds a beautiful woman gleaning—a woman more fit to bend to a harp or sit upon a throne than to stoop among the sheaves. Ah, that was an eventful day. It was love at first sight. Boaz forms an attachment for the woman gleaner—an attachment full of undying interest to the Church of God in all ages; while Ruth with an ophah or nearly a bushel of barley goes home to Naomi to tell her the successes and adventures of the day. That Ruth, who left her native land in darkness and travelled through an undying affection for her mother-in-law, is in the harvest field of Boaz, is affianced to one of the best families in Judah, and becomes in after time an ancestress of Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory; out of so dark a night did there ever dawn so bright a morning?

I learn in the first place from this subject how trouble develops character. It was that developed, illustrated and announced to all ages the sublimity of Ruth's character. That is a very unfortunate man who has no trouble. It was sorrow that made John Bunyan the better dreamer, and Dr. Young the better poet, and O'Connell the better orator, and Bishop Hall the better preacher, and Havelock the better soldier, and Kitto the better encyclopædist, and Ruth the better daughter-in-law. I once asked an aged man in regard to his pastor, who was a very brilliant man: "Why is it that your pastor, so very brilliant, seems to have so little heart and tenderness in his sermon?" "Well," he replied, "the reason is our pastor has never had any trouble. When misfortune comes upon him his style will be different.' After a while the Lord took a child out of that pastor's house; and though the preacher was just as brilliant as he was before, oh, the warmth, the tenderness of his discourses! The fact is that trouble is a great educator. You see sometimes a musician sit down at an instrument and his execution is cold and formal and unfeeling. The reason is that all his life he has been prospered. But let misfortune or bereavement come to that man and he sits down at the instrument and you discover the pathos in the first sweep of the keys.

Misfortune and trials are great educators. A young doctor comes into a sick room where there is a dying child. Perhaps he is very rough in his prescription, and very rough in his manner, and rough in the feeling of the pulse, and rough in his answer to the mother's anxious question; but years roll on, and there has been one dead in his own house: and now he comes into the sick-room and with tearful eye he looks at the dying child, and he says: "Oh, how this reminds one of my Charlie!" Trouble, the great educator, sorrow—I see its touch in the grandest painting; I hear its tremor in the sweetest song; I feel its power in the mightiest argument. Grecian mythology said that the fountain of Hippocrene was struck out by the foot of the winged horse Pegasus. I have often noticed in life that the brightest and most beautiful fountains of Christian comfort and spiritual life have been struck out by the iron-shod hoof of disaster and calamity. I see Daniel's courage best by the flash of Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. I see Paul's prowess best when I find him on the foundering ship under the glare of the lightning in the breakers of Melita. God crowns his children amid the howling of wild beasts, and the chopping of blood-splashed guillotine, and the crackling fires of martyrdom. It took the Pope's bull and the Cardinal's curse, and the world's anathema to develop Martin Luther. It took all the hostilities against the Scotch covenanters, and the fury of Lord Claverhouse to develope James Renwick, and Andrew Melville, and Hugh McKail, the glorious martyrs of Scotch history. It took the stormy sea and December blast, and the desolate New England coast, and the war whoop of savages, to show forth the prowess of the pilgrim fathers:—

"When amid the storms they sang
And the stars heard, and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim wood
Rang to the anthems of the free."

It took all our past national distresses and it takes all our present national sorrows to lift up our nation on that high career, where it will march long after the foreign aristocracies that have mocked and the tyrannies that have jeered shall be swept down under the omnipotent wrath of God, who hates despotism, and who by the strength of his own red right arm will make all men free. And so it is individually, and in the family, and in the church, and in the world, that through darkness and storm and trouble, men, women, churches, nations are developed.

Again, I see in my text the beauty of unfaltering friendship. I suppose there were plenty of friends for Naomi while she was in prosperity; but of all her acquaintances how many were willing to trudge off with her toward Judah when she had to make the lonely journey? One—the heroine of my text. One—absolutely one. I suppose when Naomi's husband was living and they had plenty of money and all things went well, they had a great many callers; but I suppose that after her husband died and her property went, and she got old and poor, she was not troubled much with callers. All the birds that sang in the bower while the sun shone, have gone to their nests now the night has fallen. Oh, these beautiful sunflowers that spread out their color in the morning hour; but they are always asleep when the sun is going down. Job had plenty of friends when he was the richest man in Uz; but when his property went and the trials came, then they were none so much that pestered as Eliphaz, the Temanite, and Bildad, the Shuhite, and Zophar, the Naamathite. Life often where the successful player pulls down all other men into his own lap. Let suspicions arise about a man's character and he becomes like a bank in a panic, and all the imputations rush on him and break down in a day that character which in due time would have had strength to defend itself. There are reputations that have been half a century in building which go down under some moral exposure as a vast temple is consumed by the touch of a sulphurous match. A hog can uproot a century plant. In this world, so full of heartlessness and hypocrisy, how thrilling it is to find some friend as faithful in days of adversity as in days of prosperity. David had such a friend in Hushai. The Jews had such a friend in Mordecai, who never forgot their cause. Paul had such a friend in Onesiphorus, who visited him in jail. Christ had such in the Marys who adhered to him on the cross. Naomi had such a one in Ruth, who cried out: "Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee; for where thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people and thy God my God; where thou diest I will die and there will I be buried. The Lord do so to me and more also if aught but death part thee and me."

Again, I learn from this subject that paths which open in hardship and darkness often come out in places of joy. When Ruth started from Moab towards Jerusalem to go along with her mother-in-law, I suppose the people said: "Oh, what a foolish creature to go away from her father's house, to go off with a poor old woman toward the land of Judah. They won't live to get across the desert. They will be drowned in the Dead Sea or the jackals of the wilderness will destroy them." It was a very dark morning when Ruth started off with Naomi; but behold her in my text in the harvest field of Boaz to be affianced to one of the lords of the land and become one of the grandmothers of Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory. And so it often is that a path which often starts very darkly ends very brightly. When you started out for heaven, oh, how dark was the hour of conviction—how Sinai thundered and devils tormented and the darkness thickened. All the sins of your life pounced upon you and it was the darkest hour you ever saw when you first found out your sins. After a while you went into the harvest field of God's mercy; you began to glean in the fields of divine promise, and you had more sheaves than you could carry, as the voice of God addressed you saying, "Blessed is the man whose transgressions are forgiven and whose sins are covered." A very dark starting in conviction. A very bright ending in the pardon and the hope and the triumph of the Gospel.

So, very often in our worldly business or in our spiritual career we start off on a very dark path. We must go. The flesh may shrink back, but there is a voice within, or a voice from above, saying: "You must go," and we have to drink the gall, and we have to carry the cross, and we have to traverse the desert, and we have to break through the thorn hedge, and we are pounded and flailed of misrepresentation and abuse, and we have to urge our way through ten thousand obstacles that have been slain by our own right arm. We have to ford the river, we have to climb the mountain, we have to storm the castle; but, blessed be God, the day of rest and reward will come. On the tip top

we will shout the victory; if not in this world, then in that world where there is no gall to drink, no burdens to carry, no battles to fight. How do I know it? I know it because God says so. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe all tears from their eyes." It was very hard for Noah to endure the scoffing of the people in his day, while he was trying to build the ark, and was every morning quizzed about his old boat that would never be of any practical use; but when the deluge came and the tops of the mountains disappeared like the backs of sea monsters, and the elements, lashed up in fury, clapped their hands over a drowned world, then Noah in the ark rejoiced in his own safety and in the safety of his family, and looked out on the wreck of a ruined earth. Behold Christ, hounded of persecutors, denied a pillow, worse maltreated than the theives on either side of the cross; human hate smacking its lips in satisfaction after it had been draining His last drop of blood; the sheeted dead bursting from the sepulchres at his crucifixion. Tell me, O Gethsemane and Golgotha, were there ever darker times than those? Like the booming of the midnight sea against the rock, the surges of Christ's anguish beat against the gates of eternity, to be echoed back by all the thrones of heaven and all the dungeons of hell. But the day of reward comes for Christ; all the pomp and dominion of this world are to be hung on his throne, uncrowned heads are to bow before him on whose head are many crowns, and all the celestial worship is to come up at his feet like the humming of the forest, like the rushing of the waters, like the thundering of the seas; while all heaven rising on their thrones beat time with their sceptres. "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Hallalujah, the kingdoms of this world have become of our Lord Jesus Christ."

"That song of love now low and far,
Ere long shall swell from star to star.
That light, the breaking day which tips
The golden-spired Apocalypse."

Again, I have to learn from my subject that events which seem to be most insignificant may be momentous. Can you imagine anything more unimportant than the coming of a poor woman from Moab to Judah? Can you imagine anything more trival than the fact that this Ruth just happened to alight on—as they say—just happened to alight on that field of Boaz? Yet all ages, all generations have an interest in the fact that she was to become an ancester of the Lord Jesus Christ, and all nations and kingdoms must look at that one little incident with a thrill of unspeakable and eternal satisfaction. So it is in your history and mine; events that you thought of no importance at all have been of very great moment. That casual conversation,

THAT ACCIDENTAL MEETING

—you did not think of it again for a long while; but how it changed all the phase of your life. It seemed to be of no importance that Jubal invented rude instruments of music, calling them harp and organ; but they were the introduction of all the world's minstrelsy; and as you hear the vibration of a stringed instrument even after the fingers have been taken away from it, so all music now of lute and drum and cornet are only the long-continued strains of Jubal's harp and Jubal's organ. It seemed to be a matter of very little importance that Tubal Cain learned the uses of copper and iron; but that rude foundry of ancient days has its echo in the rattle of Birmingham machinery and the roar and bang of factories on the Merrimac. It seemed to be a matter of no importance that Luther found a bible in a monastery; but as he opened that Bible and the brass lids fell back they jarred everything from the Vatican to the furthest convent in Germany, and the rustling of the wormed leaves was the sound of the wings of the Angel of the Reformation. It seemed to be a matter of no importance that a woman, whose name has been forgotten, dropped a tract in the way of a very bad man by the name of Richard Baxter. He picked up the tract and read it, and it was the means of his salvation. In after days that man wrote a book called "The Call to the Unconverted" that was the means of bringing a multitude to God, among others Philip Doddridge. Philip Doddridge wrote a book called "The Rise and Progress of Religion," which has brought thousands and tens of thousands into the Kingdom of God, among others the great Wilberforce. Wilberforce wrote a book called, "A Practical View of Christianity," which was the means of bringing a great multitude to Christ, among others Leigh Richmond. Leigh Richmond wrote a track called "The Dairyman's Daughter," which has been the means of the salvation of unconverted multitudes. And that tide of influence started from the fact that one Christian woman dropped a Christian track in the way of Richard Baxter—the tide of influence rolling on through Richard Baxter, through Philip Doddridge, through the great Wilberforce, through Leigh Richmond, on, on, on, forever, forever. So the insignificent events of this world seem after all to be most momentous. The fact that you came up that street or this street seemed to be of no importance to you, and the fact that you went inside of some church may seem to be a matter of very great insignificance to you, but you will find it the turning point of your history.

Again, I see in my subject an illustration of the beauty of female industry. Behold Ruth toiling in the harvest field under the hot sun or at noon taking plain bread with the reapers or eating the parched corn which Boaz handed to her. The customs of society, of course, have changed and without the hardships and exposure to which Ruth was subjected, every intelligent woman will find something to do. I know there is a sickly sentimentality on the subject. In some families there are persons of no practical service to the household or community, and though there are so many woes all around about them in the world, they spend their time languishing over a new pattern or bursting into tears over the story of some lover who shot himself. They would not deign to look at Ruth carrying back the barley on her way home to her mother-in-law Naomi. All this fastidiousness may seem to do very well while they are under the shelter of their father's house; but when the sharp winter of misfortune comes what of the butterflies? Persons under indulgent parentage may get upon themselves habits of indolence; but when they come out into practical life their soul will recoil with disgust and chagrin. They will feel in their hearts what the poet so severely satirized when he said:

Folks are so awkward, things so impolite,
They're elegantly pained from morning until night.

Through that gate of indolence, how many men and women have marched, useless on earth to a destroyed eternity! Spinola said to Sir Horace Vere: "Of what did your brother die?" "Of having nothing to do," was the answer. "Ah!" said Spinola, "that's enough to kill any general of us." Oh, can it be possible in this world where there is so much so much darkness to be enlightened, and so many burdens to be carried, that there is any person who cannot find anything to do? Madame de Stael did a world of work in her time; and one day, while she was seated amid instruments of music, all of which she had mastered, and amid manuscript books which she had written, some one said to her: "How do you find time to attend to all these things?" "Oh," she replied, "these are not the things I am proud of. My chief boast is in the fact that I have seventeen trades, by any one of which I could make a livelihood if necessary." And if in secular spheres there is so much to be done, in spiritual work how vast the field? How many dying all around us without the word of comfort! we want more Abigails, more Hannahs, more Rebeccas, more Marys, more Deborahs consecrated—body, mind, soul—to the Lord who bought them.

SUFFERING TO BE ALLEVIATED,

Once more, I learn from my subject the value of gleanings. Ruth, going into that harvest field, might have said:—"There is a straw and there is a straw, but what is a straw? I can't get any barley for myself or my mother in-law out of these separate straws." Not so said beautiful Ruth. She gathered two straws and she put them together and more straws until she got enough to make a sheaf. Putting that down she went and gathered more straws until she had another sheaf and another and another and another and then she brought them together and she threshed them out and she had an ephah of barley, nigh a bushel. Oh, that we might all be gleaners! It is all the straws that make the harvest, it is the pence that make the pound, and it is all the opportunities of doing good that make a life of usefulness if rightly employed. Elihu Burritt learned many things while toiling in a blacksmith's shop. Abercrombie, the world-renowned philosopher, was a philosopher in Scotland, and he got his philosophy, or the chief part of it, while, as a physician, he was waiting for the door of the sick-room to open. Yet how many there are in this day who say they are so busy they have no time for mental or spiritual improvement, the great duties of life cross the field like strong reapers and carry off all the hours, and there is only here and there a fragment left—that is not worth gleaning. Ah, my friends, you could go into the busiest day and busiest week of your life and find golden opportunities which, gathered, might at least make a whole sheaf for the Lord's garner. It is the stray opportunities and the stray privileges which, taken up and bound together and beaten out, will at last fill you with much joy—yea, more joy than Ruth felt when she took home to her mother-in-law, Naomi, the sheaf of barley.

There are a few moments left worth the gleaning. Now, Ruth, to the field. May each one have a measure full and running over. Oh, you gleaners, to the field! And if there be in your household an aged one or a sick relative that is not strong enough to come forth and toil in this field, then let Ruth take home to feeble Naomi this sheaf of gleanings; "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." May the Lord God of Ruth and Naomi be your portion forever!

Bridgenorth Regatta.

Remember that the great regatta at Bridgenorth takes place on Thursday, August 6th. There are several entries for the different events already made, and a fine day's sport may be expected.

Prob'e Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Light to moderate winds, mostly north and north-west, fair weather, slightly lower temperature.

As Good as His Word.

Mr. A. C. Dunlop, who so generously promised to contribute $100 towards beautifying the Court House Park, to the Horticultural Society, on condition that ten others would give $10 each, has placed the amount promised by him to the credit of the Society in the Bank.

Sport in Town To-day.

As we go to press this afternoon the first eleven of the Peterborough cricket club are trying to win a match against eighteen other members of the association. The Bethany base ball nine have made their appearance once more, and are getting hard times from the local nine, particularly from Sullivan's twisters.

Moonlight on the Water.

The members and friends the City Band had an excursion last evening on the steamer "Golden Eye," and a large number of citizens availed themselves of the opportunity to enjoy a moonlight ride on the Little Lake. About four hours were spent in cruising around the lake, during which time dancing was indulged in by many of the excursionists, and on returning home all were well pleased at the pleasant way in which the evening had been spent.

Garden Social.

A Garden Social in aid of the Organ Fund of George Street Methodist Church, will be held on Tuesday evening, August 4th, in the beautiful grounds of T. Bradburn, Esq. All fruits of the season will be served, together with ice cream and lemonade, and the Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance. Admission ten cents. Those who were unable, on on account of the unfavorable weather, to attend the Garden Social, under the same auspices, announced for July 9th, should not fail to be present on this occasion, as a very enjoyable entertainment may be confidently expected.

The Market.

The market this morning was very well attended by the farmers, and not withstanding the large amount of produce which was brought in for sale, prices had an upward tendency. Butter sold for 18 and 19 cents per pound, eggs for 12 and 13 cents per dozen, potatoes 30 cents per peck, raspberries 80 and 90 cents per pail, apples 30 cents per peck, and chickens 50 cents a pair. There was very little hay for the sun to shine upon, and consequently $12 per ton had to be paid for what was there. Oats sold for 35 cents per bushel.

Another Lacrosse Club.

About twenty-five of the boys of Ashburnham, and a few from this side of the line, gathered together at C. Young's hotel last evening for the purpose of forming a new lacrosse club. The club was formed and will "fly their kite" under the name of the "Riverside Lacrosse Club." The following officers were elected for the remainder of the season:—President, Harry Neil; Vice-President, C. Young; Secretary-Treasurer, T. Millane; Captain, J. Carveth. Managing Committee:—M. Higgins, A. Mercier and G. Sloan. Another meeting will be held on next Friday evening, when the question of a new uniform for the club will be discussed. In the meantime the new "blood" will take exercise on the Riverside Park every lawful evening.

Civic Holiday Excursion.

An excursion will be run to Belleville on the Civic Holiday by regular train at 7.30 a. m. Parties who desire can picnic at Bleecker's Grove, near the G. T. station. Return tickets $1, good for two days.

Separate School Board.

The adjourned meeting of the Separate School Board was held last evening in the Murray Street School. The estimates of the current year were passed, and $2,500 is the sum required from the town Treasurer as expenditures for Separate School purposes.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
0 o'clock	73°	29.15°
1 o'clock	84°	29.17°

Gas for the First Ward.

Men are engaged to-day in digging a gas-pipe trench near the C. P. R. station. The gas main is to be extended down as far as the corner of Perry street, where a lamp will be placed in front of Mr. Halpin's grocery. Another is to be planted at the corner of Rink street. This is an action on the part of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, which has been looked for by the residents of the first ward for a long time.

"Out of Debt, Out of Danger."

Mr. D. Anderson, of Apsley, treasurer of the united townships of Burleigh, Anstruther and Chandos, called at this office yesterday and stated that the amount for which their debt was compromised by the County Council had been paid. The municipality is now for the first time since 1868, free from debt. It would be well for the electors of these townships in future, when choosing representatives, to select men who will so study economy as to preclude the possibility of again involving their constituents in debts that they are incapable of meeting.

Spacious Dressing Rooms.

Last evening when the members of the lacrosse club went down to the Driving Park for practice they were surprised to be escorted by Mr. Henry Gordon into a spacious and clean dressing room, erected by that gentleman under the grand stand. The new apartment possesses every convenience necessary for a dressing room, from clothes hooks to the "soft side of a plank" for a seat, and was highly approved of by the players. There will be practice every evening next week, when the park will be thrown open for visitors who wish to take a walk or a drive to that quarter.

Philharmonic Society.

The meeting which was called for a short time ago, for the formation of a Philharmonic society for this town, was very fairly attended. Another meeting will be held in about a fortnight, when it is expected that very many eligible members who are out of town, will have returned from their holiday jaunts. With the abundant musical talent in Peterborough, and with the organization and development of it in the hands of two such capable gentlemen as Messrs. Parker and Hampshire, we are certain that an excellent Philharmonic society will be established.

Once More She Shines.

Some time ago Mr. T. B. McGraw started to "paint the town red" beginning at the store of Mr. H. LeBrun. To prevent any damage being done to the large horse shoe, it was removed from its position over the door, until "Tom" was through with his work. During its absence from its position, "Harry" experienced many troubles. His twelve lacrosse pets suffered two defeats, and not a few have remarked recently that it had something to do with the report that came from Ottawa regarding the post office. It was placed in its position once more over the door to-day, and we hope that a new era of prosperity in the line of gents' furnishings, lacrosse matches and post offices aites will dawn on the genial proprietor of the City Clothing Store.

As Parting Gift.

At the close of the Bible Class at St. Luke's Church last night the Rector invited those present to remain for a few moments, as he had an important matter to bring before them. He then said that he had been commissioned by a few members of the congregation to give Mrs. H. H. Smith a parting token of the regard and esteem in which she was held by them, on the occasion of her approaching departure to Winnipeg. A brief address was then read, alluding to Mrs. Smith's faithful services on behalf the church, and the presentation, consisting of several handsome and well-bound books, was duly made. Mr. Smith briefly and appropriately replied, thanking all for the gift, and stating her deep regret at leaving Peterborough.

Fast Time at The Lansdowne.

The races held at the Lansdowne Rink last evening proved very interesting, and in the senior's race the best time yet made on the rink was recorded. Four competitors faced the starter, Shevlin, Logan, Scott and McFarlane, the latter being considerably younger and smaller than the others. Shevlin went away with the lead, closely followed by the rest, but at the second turn Logan and Scott came to grief, and lost a lap. Recovering their feet they made another attempt, but both shortly after fell again at the same turn and Scott gave it up. Shevlin maintained and increased his lead on Logan, but could not get more than one lap ahead of the little fellow McFarlane, who, although not strong enough for his older rival, made a capital race. Shevlin finished in the excellent time of 7 min. 58 sec., which as said before, is the fastest time yet made on the rink. A juniors' race, won by Coursey, with Johnston second, followed, after which an exhibition was given by Professor Kerr.

The "Military Ball."

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—Yesterday afternoon while going down George street, I was astonished to see in many of the shop windows, a large poster announcing a "Grand Military Ball" to be held in the Lansdowne roller rink, with the names of Lt-Col. J. Z. Rogers and Major R. W. Bell attached thereto. I wish to state that both names are there without our authority, and that I was perfectly ignorant of anything of the kind being in contemplation until I saw the posters. I must say that the promoters of the affair, whoever they may be, have had a good deal of presumption to use the name of our Battalion or any of its officers without consent. I therefore, on my own behalf, and that of our Battalion, repudaite all connection or responsibility with the "Ball." I am sure if Lt.-Colonel Rogers were at home, he along with myself, would be only too glad to assist in promoting an evening's entertainment in some desirable manner for the men of our Battalion at any time, but if the Battalion or its officers' names are to be used as such, it can only be done by Col. Rogers' consent, when we will be responsible and guarantee the respectability of the affair.

Trusting our names may not again be used in such an unwarranted manner, either for the pleasure of the parties concerned, or as an advertising medium.

I remain,
R. W. BELL,
Major 57th Batt.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

The Notorious Newbold.

The Famous Bigamist Dies in Ohio State Penitentiary—His Body will be Brought here for Burial.

Word was received in town this morning that the notorious bigamist Newbold, who some time ago was sentenced to a lengthened term of imprisonment in the Ohio state penitentiary at Columbus, died in that institution yesterday afternoon. A representative of the EXAMINER this morning called on his wife, who lives on Edinburgh street, and learned from her that Newbold had been ill for some time, and had latterly been in the hospital of the prison. In his letters to her he complained that his head was suffering, and it is supposed that brain fever was the cause of his death. Mrs. Newbold received a telegram this morning from the prison authorities, asking if she desired to have the body sent on here for burial, and immediately wired back a reply in the affirmative. It is expected that the body will arrive on Wednesday or Thursday. Newbold was 43 years of age.

Appointment.

Mr. E. A. Snyder, of this town, has secured appointment as an inspector in the Northwest Mounted Police force. We understand the position with perquisites will be equal to about $2,000 per year. Mr. Snyder is certainly in luck.

A Sign of the Times.

During the storm this afternoon a heavy sign above W. H. Wrighton's grocery store became loosened from its fastenings and came to the sidewalk with a crash. Fortunately no one was hurt, although a young man passing at the time had a narrow escape from being struck by it.

A Desideratum.

Mr. D. Belleghem, the Hunter street furniture dealer and undertaker, has secured the agency for Peterrborough of the American chair fan, a mechanical novelty that can in a few minutes be adjusted to any rocking chair or cradle, and which when attached raises a cool and refreshing breeze, and will also keep the ubiquitous house fly at a convenient distance. For invalids and persons in delicate health the invention is invaluable as it can be raised or turned in any direction at will and entirely obviates the necessity of any physical exertion in fanning, the rocking of the chair producing the desired action, while a single motion is sufficient to suspend it and again convert the chair into an ordinary rocker. No house should be without it.

Toronto's Disastrous Blaze.

The Queen City has a $300,000 Fire.

At 12:30 this morning the worst fire that has ever visited the city of Toronto broke out in the mammoth eight-story brick building on the south side of the Esplanade at the foot of Princess street, known as the glucose factory. Policeman Trotter sounded an alarm, and the whole fire brigade was called out.

For destructiveness and loss of property the fire has probably never had an equal in the city. At the present writing, 3.30 a.m., it is impossible to form the faintest conception of the gigantic loss that will fall on the owners of the valuable property over which the fiery scourge passed, leaving only blackened ruins in its tracks. Scores of valuable craft of all grades, which were moored along the docks, suffered alike with the factory, the foundry, the elevator, the boat houses, etc.

The rapidity with which the flames spread was nothing short of a marvel. A strong dead east wind, amounting at times to almost a hurricane, was blowing when the fire broke out. Great sparks and burning cinders were blown westward with rapidity, and by 2 o'clock the flames had reached the foot of Scott street. Almost everything in its wake, stationery and afloat, from Princess to Yonge streets, was burned to the ground. The captain of the steamers Annie Mulvey, Thos. Uglow and Wm. McCallum, of Port Hope were pretty badly burned, the latter seriously.

TOTAL LOSS ABOUT $300,000.

A prominent insurance man was viewing the ruins about 3.30 o'clock. In answer to a question by a reporter he said he estimated the total loss at $300,000. On this, he said, there would be an insurance of about $175,000.

The Doom of Riel.

Guilty and Sentenced to be Hanged September 18th.

REGINA, Aug. 1.—The jury in the Riel trial were out about 30 minutes. They returned a verdict of guilty.

Judge Richardson, when he began his charge to the jury, confined himself chiefly to reading extracts from the evidence. He then reviewed the law upon which the court was established and the trial conducted. The charge was concluded at 2.15 and the jury retired. The oath was administered to the guard to keep the jury without meat or drink, fire or lodging.

THE VERDICT.

At 3.15 there was a murmur in the Court, and it was whispered that the jury had agreed. All was bustle and excitement. Riel prayed fervently, kneeling in his box, and looked unmoved as the jury entered with a verdict of guilty. Francis Congreve, the foreman, while crying like a child, announced that he was asked by his fellow-jurors to recommend the prisoner to the mercy of the Crown, and the judge said the recommendation would be considered.

Riel was sentenced to be hanged on Sept. 18 at Regina.

Judge Richardson said he could hold out no prospect of a reprieve or interference by her Majesty. Riel took the result coolly, having spoken two hours reviewing the troubles of 1869 and the half-breed grievances up to the present.

It is not yet settled how the other half-breed prisoners will be charged. It will probably be treason-felony in order to obviate the necessity of serving an indictment 10 days before trial. A majority of the prisoners will be charged with murder, although some may be indicted for treason-felony or levying war. The latter charge is not necessarily capital.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Wounded Pride.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—My attention has been directed to a letter in the EXAMINER of Saturday last, wherein Major Bell, of the 57th Battalion, Peterborough Rangers, cries aloud for redress from the members of G Company (who formed part of the Midland Battalion in the memorable Northwest rebellion), for daring to use his name in connection with the military ball that is to be held under their auspices in the Lansdowne Skating Rink on Thursday evening, August 6th. Boys of Company G, do you know what a crime you have committed in your eagerness to do honor to an officer? If you had not used the name of this gentleman as an advertising medium (?) without his consent, how vastly different everything in connection with your ball would be! As it is, you have done an injustice to an officer that will take a long time to atone for. The wrath of this popular officer has been aroused and great will be the consequence thereby. He assumes with all the presumption by which his every action is characterized to speak for Col. J. Z. Rogers as well as for himself. Now, Mr. Editor, I have not the least doubt if Col. Rogers had been at home he would not have had one moment's hesitation in allowing this company, of which he can well feel proud, to use his name. Not only that, but I feel pretty safe in making the assertion that he would assist them by every means in his power to make the evening's entertainment a success. Major Bell has never been a popular officer with the men of the battalion, and his action in connection with the volunteers who are promoting this ball will not raise him in their esteem as an officer. Admitting that it was wrong to use his name without his consent, and thereby cause him pain for his wounded feelings, did he take the course of an officer who had the interest of his men at heart? No, he immediately rushed into print, and meaningly insinuates that the respectability of the entertainment is not guaranteed because his consent was not obtained. Oh, vain Major! fie on such an action. Your popularity is in your own estimation only. It goes no further than this. There is not an officer in the battalion but would scorn such an action. Brothers in arms! up and resent such an insult to the brave boys who recently responded at the first call of the war trumpet to stake their lives for their country! Show your appreciation of their valuable services by turning out to a man, and attend their harmless and respectable evening's entertainment, notwithstanding the silly and childish notions of Major Bell to the contrary.

Cabinet Changes.

What cabinet changes, asks a World correspondent at Ottawa, have been made? is the question in everybody's mouth, but no one appears to answer satisfactorily. That changes are imminent is admitted on every hand. The delay in swearing in Thomas White a day or two ago, as Minister of the Interior, was at first alleged to be due to the absence of Chief Justice Ritchie, who has power to administer the oath of office, but it is now claimed that Sir Chas. Tupper's sudden departure for Canada had much to do with the matter. That Mr. White is to be Minister of the Interior is now absolutely sure, but speculation is rife as to the other ministers.

Yesterday's cabinet council was thought to be the last before vacation, but another was held this afternoon, at which nearly all the ministers were present.

After the council meeting Sir John and Lady Macdonald left in a special car via the Canada Atlantic Railway for Cacouna.

The statement made in the Ottawa correspondence of the Toronto Mail that the statemakers had reconstructed the cabinet as follows:—McLean, Finance Minister; Thomas White, Minister of the Interior; Senator Dickey, marine and fisheries; Pope, railways; Kirkpatrick, minister of agriculture, and Sir Leonard Tilley to remain in the cabinet without a a portfolio, is regarded here as simply a blind to provoke discussion, so that the premier may profit by criticism of the persons named. This view is borne out by the statement made by Postmaster General Carling that the above statements were simply speculations and that no changes had been made. A statement which is regarded as more probable than that in the Toronto Mail and differs radically in its construction. That statement runs thus:

Minister of Finance—Sir Charles Tupper.

Minister of the interior—Thomas White.

Minister of Militia and leader of the Senate—G. A. Kirkpatrick, at present speaker of the House of Commons.

Minister of Justice—J. P. R. A. Caron.

Minister of Railways and Canals—John Henry Pope.

Minister of Agriculture—Peter White or C. C. Colby.

Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario—Sir Alex. Campbell.

Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick—Sir Leonard Tilley.

High Commissioner to England—Sir David Macpherson.

Weights and Measures.

Changes Made at the Last Session of Parliament.

The following are the changes made in the Act relating to weights and measures at the last session of the Dominion Parliament:—

The last paragraph of sub-section one of section 16 which declares two gallons shall be a peck, eight gallons shall be a bushel, and twenty-five gallons shall be a barrel is repealed and the following only substituted,—Two gallons shall be a peck and eight gallons shall be a bushel.

It is also provided that:—

Upon the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, section seventeen of the said Act shall be repealed and the following substituted in lieu thereof:—

In contracts for the sale and delivery of any of the undermentioned articles, the bushel shall be determined by weighing, unless a bushel by measure is specially agreed upon—the weight equivalent to a bushel being as follows:—Wheat, sixty pounds; Indian corn, fifty-six pounds; rye, fifty-six pounds; peas, sixty pounds; barley, forty-eight pounds; malt, thirty-six pounds; oats, thirty-four pounds; beans, sixty pounds; clover seed, sixty pounds; timothy seed, forty-eight pounds; buckwheat, forty-eight pounds; flax seed, fifty pounds; hemp seed, forty-four pounds; blue grass seed, fourteen pounds; castor beans, forty pounds; potatoes, turnips, carrots, paranips, beets and onions, sixty pounds; bituminous coal, seventy pounds.

The only change in the above is the fixing of a weight for bituminous coal. The remainder of the section is new and is as follows:—

Every person who violates any provision of this section shall be liable, for the first offence, to a penalty not exceeding twenty-five dollars, and for each subsequent offence to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars.

All apples packed in Canada for sale by the barrel shall be packed in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood made as nearly cylindrical as may be; the staves of such barrels shall be twenty-seven inches in length from croe to croe, with heads from sixteen and one-half to seventeen inches in diameter; and such barrels shall be sufficiently hooped, with a lining hoop within the chimes, the whole well secured by nails.

Every person who offers or exposes apples for sale by the barrel, otherwise than in accordance with the foregoing provision of this section, shall be liable to a penalty of twenty-five cents for each barrel of apples so offered or exposed for sale.

If any weight, beam, balance, measure, or weighing machine is voluntarily given up or abandoned by the owner thereof to any inspector or assistant inspector of weights and measures, as forfeited under the "Weights and Measures Act of 1879," or if any sum of money is voluntarily paid to any such inspector, with the consent and approval of the Minister of Inland Revenue, as the amount of any penalty under the said Act, such abandonment or payment shall be deemed to be a lawful abandonment or payment; and the weight, beam, balance, measure or weighing machine so abandoned or given up may be dealt with as if forfeited under the said Act, and the sum of money so paid may be dealt with as if it was a penalty recovered under the said Act.

The Cholera Spreading.

MADRID, August 1.—Frequent thunderstorms are largely increasing the cholera mortality. In the whole of Spain on Wednesday there were reported 3,168 new cases, and 1,552 deaths.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Cholera has begun to develop alarmingly in the south of France. Within the last four days 37 deaths have been reported at Marseilles, and one case is said to have occurred at Lyons.

The Mounted Police.

WINNIPEG, August 1.—The Mounted Police have been increased to one thousand men, distributed as follows:—One hundred at Carlton under Colonel Cotton, 100 at Calgary under Colonel Herchmer, 200 at Battleford, half at Fort Pitt under Captain Dickens, 100 at Prince Albert under Captain Gagnon, 90 at Maple Creek, 50 at Medicine Hat, 50 at Edmonton, a detachment at Wood Mountain and the balance at Regina.

The Song of Sherman.

The writer par excellence of war ballads was Henry Clay Work, who died in June, 1884. To enumerate and comment on his pieces only would make an ordinary newspaper article. The title alone would cover those that are not most familiar, i. e.: After naming "Marching Through Georgia," "Kingdom Coming," "Babylon Is Fallen" and "Wake, Nicodemus," let the reader propose to himself from other equally popular pieces during the war. Work himself wrote besides "Corporal Schnapps," "Brave Boys Are They," "Little Major," "Song of a Thousand Years," "Our Last Grand Camping Ground," and many others less known. Of all these "Marching Through Georgia" stands without a peer. It is the only one that has stood the test of years, and it is as readily recognized to-day as "Yankee Doodle." More than 400,000 copies of the song were sold by the publishers. It has been sung in every state in the Union. No Grand Army camp-fire is duly opened till the boys have fairly raised the roof with its resounding melody. I once saw General Sherman himself attempt to sing the words with over 4,000 school children gathered to do him honor; but the magnitude of the scene, the impressiveness of the children's reverence, overcame him; his voice faltered, and with reddened eyes he passed through the crowded lines, grasping as many as he could of the eagerly outstretched hands.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Catching a Man-o'-War Bird.

An old sailor, whose appearance indicated that he had been much buffeted by wind and wave, stood yesterday resting his back against a mooring-post near a bulkhead in South street, and, despite the raw atmosphere, meditatively smoking. The glowing bowl of his pipe rested on the top of a barrel some distance away, and the stem was fully four feet long. It was very thin, and seemed to be bone. Its hue was a bright, glossy black, though what its original color had been the sailor had to say. It curved with a long, graceful, uniform sweep from the mariner's lips to the bowl.

"It's the wing bone of a man-o'-war bird," said the owner when asked about it. "Land folks, I believe, call them albatrosses; we sailors like the old name of man-o-war bird better. I caught the one that I got this stem from about five hundred miles south of the Cape of Good Hope. I hooked him with a piece of raw fat pork tied to the end of a rope lanyard. It was blowing half a gale of wind, and the man-o'-war birds were out enjoying it as usual.

"They just touch the top of a wave with their feet, and then give a sharp, quick cry and go driving on a hundred yards or so before they take another plunge. I got a big lump of fat pork at the galley, and let it tow overboard with the lanyard, about fifty yards astern of the ship. One of the birds saw it, and had swallowed it in a minute, and we began to haul him. My stars! but he gave us a job. It took five of us to get him on deck, and then, of all the unwieldy birds you ever saw he was the worst. A goose would have been graceful to him, and he did not seem a bit like the beautiful white birds of his kind that were sweeping about the ship, now ahead and now astern, sailing against the wind or with it just about the same rate of speed, and seeming to be part of the gale.

"My prisoner squatted down on the deck and began to cry. There was no doubt about it. He sobbed and whimpered like a hurt child, and the tears ran down his long hooked beak and dropped off the knob at the end. After a time he became seasick. But his illness did not cease there. He got more and more sick every minute as the vessel rolled and pitched in the heavy sea that was running. It was genuine seasickness. This seems curious with a bird that lives altogether on the water, but a man-o'-war bird always gets seasick when he is taken on the deck of a rolling ship. I would have saved him if I could, but if I had thrown him overboard he would have been swamped by the big seas before he could have used his long wings. Neither could he rise from the deck, and in about two hours he laid his head down on the planks and died.

"I divided the long wing bones among the crew, and they all made pipe-stems of them. They are hollow, flesh-colored, and very light, and that is the reason the man-o'-war bird can fly so long. It is forever on the wing, and only goes ashore on some uninhabited island at breeding-time. Sailors think they sleep flying, that is, some of them think so but I believe they sleep floating on the water, when it is calm enough—which is not often about the Cape of Good Hope, or else never sleep at all. They are the biggest birds that live anywhere. The one I caught weighed twenty-nine pounds, and measured seventeen feet from wing tip to wing tip, and he was not at all a large one. No, we had no ill luck after the bird's death. If you shoot one and kill him you may look out for squalls, but to catch him with a piece of fat pork and let him die on deck is a different thing altogether, you know."—New York Sun.

Going Too Far.

California Ostrich Farmer—My dear, did you feed the birds regularly while I was away?

Mrs. Ostrich Farmer—Yes, as regularly as I could. I never saw such appetites. The provisions ran short, and I had to feed them on whatever I could find around the house. I gave them two kegs of nails.

"That's right."

"And all the gate hinges and three pieces of old stove pipe."

"Yes? Glad you were so thoughtful."

"Oh! Yes, I forgot. They didn't seem to be satisfied even then, so I gave them a piece of mince-pie."

"Great Galen, woman! did you want to kill them?"—Philadelphia Call.

THE POSTOFFICE.

There appears, so far, no official confirmation of the rumour that the Phalen lot has been selected for the site of the proposed postal and customs buildings for the town of Peterborough. From the fact that the most powerful political pressure in the selection of a site has, and is being brought to bear upon the Dominion Government, it is not probable that that time-serving coterie has committed itself by coming to any decision. It is probable that so long as the applicants can be kept at bay the Government will not run the risk, by making a selection, of alienating any of its supporters and friends in Peterborough. The rumour to which we gave publicity in a recent issue is more in keeping with the modes of action of the present Administration at Ottawa. By the selection of two sites—one for the Postoffice and one for the Customs—there will be two parties satisfied, and one less disappointed holder of a corner lot. Of course the expense of the new structures will be immensely added to by such an arrangement. But when was the Dominion Government influenced by any considerations of economy where political objects were at stake? No matter how much the cost will be, the politicians must be conciliated. The public convenience demands that the Customs and Postal buildings shall be under one roof; and it also demands that the most central and eligible site shall be chosen. These considerations the Government have ignored in the past; and they will continue to ignore them. They seem to be shameless in the manner of prostituting a prominent public interest to political purposes. We have before pointed out that other towns of less commercial importance than Peterborough, have already been provided with public buildings, in the shape of Postal and Customs offices. It would appear that nothing but the political importance of the Peterborough matter can account for the delay. Peterborough has given the present Government a firm support, and all the reward she is likely to receive is that of being made a tool of to confirm the hold of the Government on this riding. The matter has gone so far now that it will, no doubt, be reserved to do service in another election campaign. The politicians may accept the situation with patience, but the people are disgusted.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The exact official majority for the Scott Act in Victoria is 965.

Notice of the reduction of tolls on the St. Lawrence canals to 2 cents per ton on wheat, corn, peas and barley is given in Saturday's Canada Gazette.

The Government have decided to allow distillers permission to remove spirits in quantities not less than ten gallons from their distilleries into counties where the Scott Act is in force.

A grand Reform demonstration and picnic will be held under the auspices of the Reform Association of Hullowell, Prince Edward County, on Saturday at the Sandbanks. Dr. J. M Platt, M. P. for Prince Edward, and R. C. Clute, Q. C., of Belleville, will be present and address the electors.

The annual guaranteed interest on the Canadian Pacific stock is three per cent., which means twelve per cent. to those directors who obtained their stock at twenty-five cents on the dollar. The Government only gives the hard working mechanic who deposits his savings in the postoffice bank four per cent. But then, says the Ottawa Free Press, the mechanics are not wealthy capitalists!

The Dominion Government, under power of an act passed last session, has loaned the Canadian Pacific five millions of dollars in treasury bills, and these have been used by the company as collateral for discharging its floating debt. The Bank of Montreal negotiated the transaction. The company expects, it says, to redeem these treasury bills out of the proceeds of the sale of fifteen millions of bonds just effected in England. Within two or three months the sanguine expectations are that hard cash with nine millions to spare will replace the treasury bills.

Transient Trading.

A good deal of misapprehension appears to exist as to what the Ontario Act of last session, relating to hawkers and pedlars, was intended to cover. Section 495 of the Consolidated Municipal Act of 1883 provides that, any municipality may pass by-laws for the purpose of licensing hawkers and petty chapmen. It is, however, provided that no such license shall be required for peddling to retail dealers, or hawking or peddling any goods or wares, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the Province, except liquors, by the manufacturer or producer, or his bona fide servant or employee having written authority in that behalf.

The provision of the Act of last session is an amendment to the clause of the Municipal Act referred to, and declares that the word 'hawkers' in that section 'shall include all persons who, being agents for persons not resident within the county, sell or offer for sale, tea, dry goods or jewellry, or carry and expose samples or patterns of any such goods to be afterwards delivered within the county to any person not being a wholesale or retail dealer in such goods, wares or merchandise.' Some persons have, apparently, fancied that this was broad enough to prevent outsiders from buying up bankrupt stocks and having them run off by clerks, or from sending bankrupt stocks into the country and having them sold over the counter by clerks. This is, we think, a mistake. Whatever the object of the Legislature was, it will probably be held that the amendment of last session means nothing more than that the protection given to hawking of goods, wares or merchandise, 'the growth, produce, or manufacture of this Province,' shall not apply where the commodities to be sold are tea, dry goods or jewellry. Those who imagine that the amended Act has any greater force than what we have indicated above, will, probably, on the matter coming up for decision, find out their mistake.—Monetary Times.

Soldiers' Fare.

Harmful Effects of the Changless Diet.

The fact that the volunteers during the late campaign subsisted on hard tack, fat pork, canned corn beef and beans, has been very generally accepted, but the public has hardly yet realized what this means. The Battleford column did not have potatoes or any other vegetable, except beans, from the time the men marched until the time they reached Toronto again. Even while they were on the line of railway, before they began the march across the plains to Battleford, was served out. When meal time came a man could have fat pork and beans, or he could have hard tack and corned beef. He might, it is true, change the combination now and again for a relish, but those mentioned must be the standing dishes. When the next meal time came he had the same choice, no more, no less. And so with the next meal and the next and the next, without any prospect of variety. Rice or barley would have been as easy to carry as the beans, but nobody seems to have thought of either in time to supply it. There was no relish or condiment to make the food more palatable and give it the least semblance of a change. It is a great testimony to the healthiness of the climate, and to the soundness of the men, that they were able to go on with their work upon such fare. Everything was fairly good of its kind, but the monotony can be but faintly imagined by those who have variety at every meal. Some of the men showed the effects of the treatment they underwent in various forms of illness, principally manifested by a rash breaking out all over the body, and by great lassitude and incapacity for sustained effort. The men did not complain, knowing that all were being treated exactly alike, and that the humblest private fared just as well as his colonel did. The case was made all the worse by the fact that the country through which they passed was almost destitute of supplies. Even when the column reached Battleford they found the people generally living on Government supplies and what few other things there were obtainable only at "war prices," quadrupled. Butter cost from 75c. to $1.50 a pound, that at the former price being almost uneatable. A story is told of one private who paid and other things in proportion. Even had the men been willing to buy things for themselves the prices would very soon have put that beyond their power. Of course, there are not wanting those who say that the men could not expect to be treated as if they were boarding in a moveable hotel, but they could very easily have been treated better than they were. "Plumduff" as the sailors call it, or something to take its place, might readily have been served out to the men twice a week or so, and it would have been a very agreeable change. Even the wounded in the hospital tent at Battleford after the battle at Cut Knife Creek, could not be supplied with any luxuries. They also had to take the regulation fare or go hungry. The officers secured some fresh meat for them, and subsequently arrangements were made to supply them with fresh milk and one or two other articles necessary to their condition until the arrival of Dr. Nattress with the Red Cross supplies from Toronto. It is stated that at first Dr. Nattress could not secure proper transport for his supplies, on the ground that they were "luxuries," but after making an ineffectual attempt to get through with carts, he insisted upon having proper teams and waggons, which were at last supplied him.

NO BREAD

TWENTY-SEVEN CENTS FOR ONE EGG,

EFFICIENT WORKERS

The ambulance corps and the medical and hospital staff were both exceedingly efficient, and both worked very hard. To them must be attributed in large measure the gratifying fact that the wounded men are all as strong as ever again or rapidly becoming so. The climate also, no doubt, had something to do with it. The transport of supplies seems to have been, in many cases, simply laughable in its inefficiency. The average team with forage carried about sixty bushels of oats, or say 2,000 lbs. weight. The team cost the Government $10 a day, so that every day they travelled added ½c. per pound to the cost of the oats, or, say 17c. a bushel. The horses of the team would eat a bushel a day, so that, while the cost of hauling was increasing, the amount hauled was growing less. The double acting expense account explains how it is that the Government had to pay such enormous prices for oats, and proves the shrewdness of the settlers and others who mixed wheat with the oats and sold the whole as oats. But the team that went out had to come back also, and had to be given supplies for its return journey. Under the circumstances, it does not seem improbable that the whole load would be required to feed the team, and the result of the trip would be the trip and nothing more. It is claimed that in some cases the team used the whole load on the trip one way and had to be given supplies from the stores brought to camp in order to make the return journey, but this seems a little too much to believe.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Punishment of Falsifiers.

During the fourteenth century there can be no doubt that the companies exercised a very effective superintendence over trade and manufacture. The city records abound with accounts of the exposure and punishment of fraud at the instigation of the companies, whose representatives seem to have used their powers of scrutiny and search with considerable vigor. Some of the cases reported with all solemnity in the "Remembrancia" are very quaint, and afford a curious insight into the manner of the time. Thus in 1311 we read of a scrutiny of "false hats" being prosecuted "at the request of the hatters." with the result that 15 black and 40 gray and white hats were seised as false, and condemned to be burned in Chepe, while "certain other hats," of the bona fides of which there was some doubt, were "postponed for further consideration." In 1316 "the good folk of the trade of potters" denounced to the Mayor and Alderman diver persons, and especially one "Aleyn le Sopere," who busied themselves by buying "in diver places pots of bad metal, and then put them on the fire so as to resemble pots that have [illegible] then," the record continues, "they expose them for sale in West Chepe on Sundays and other festival days to the deception of all those who buy such pots, for the moment they are put upon the fire and exposed to great heat they come to nothing and melt. By which roguery and falsehood the people are deceived, and the trade also is badly put to slander." The magistrates of the fourteenth century were not restricted to the dull monotony of "40s. or a month," and they seem in devising penalties to have given free scope to their powers of invention. For example, one Quilhogge having bought a putrid pig, which had been lying a long time by the riverside, for 4d., cut from it two gammons for sale, and sold part thereof "in deceit of the people." He was sentenced to stand in the pillory while "the residue of the gammons was burnt beneath him." In the same way a seller of bad wine was condemned to stand in the pillory, to drink a draught of his own stuff, and to have the remainder poured over his head. We may well envy our ancestors the protections of this excellent law, and sigh that the solace of its discriminating application is denied to us. —Quarterly Review.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

Chapter IV—Continued.

"But what?"

"I will write. I will say what you say to il dottore."

"Who is the doctor? I can write to him or see him."

"Did I say il dottore? It was a slip. No, you must not write. I will ask him and he must decide."

"You will write at once?"

"At once." Teresa, with a lingering glance at the money, turned to leave me.

"You had better take these two notes," I said, handing them to her.

She buttoned them in the bosom of her dress with feverish delight.

"Tell me, Teresa," I said coaxingly, "tell me if you think—if the Signorina—Pauline—cares at all for me?"

"Who knows," answered the old woman, testily; "I do not know—but again I say to you she is not for love or marriage."

Not for love or marriage! I laughed aloud as I thought of the old woman's absurd and oft-repeated assertion. If on the earth there was one woman more than another made for love and marriage it was my beautiful Pauline. I wondered what Teresa could mean; then remembering the fervor with which she prayed in San Giovanni I decided that, being an ardent Roman Catholic, she wished Pauline to take the veil. This theory would explain everything.

Now that I had bought Teresa I looked forward to the enjoyment of Pauline's society without espionage or interruption. The old woman had taken my money, and no doubt would do her best to earn more. If I could persuade the girl to let me pass several hours of each day in her company I need fear no hindrance from Teresa. The bribe had been accepted, and, although I blushed at the expedient to which I had been compelled to resort, it had been successful.

I was obliged to defer any further attempt at love-making until the next evening, as an important piece of business had to be attended to in the morning. It kept me away from home for several hours, and when at last I returned to Maida vale I was thunderstruck to hear that my fellow lodgers had left the house. The landlady had no idea whither they had gone. Teresa, who it appears always acted as purse-bearer, had paid her dues and had departed with her young mistress. There was nothing more to tell.

I threw myself into my chair, cursing Italian guile; yet, as I thought of Italian cupidity, not altogether hopeless. Perhaps Teresa would write or come to me. I had not forgotten the eager looks she cast upon my money. But day after day passed without letter or message.

I spent those days, for the most part, wandering about the streets in the vain hope of encountering the fugitives. It was only after this second loss that I really knew the extent of my passion. I cannot describe the longing I had to see that fair face once more. Yet I feared the love was all on my side. If Pauline had felt even a passing interest in me she could scarcely have left in this secret and mysterious manner. Her heart was yet to be won, and I knew that unless I won it no woman's love would to me be worth having.

I should have returned to my old lodging in Walpole street had it not been that I feared to quit Maida vale, lest Teresa, if she should be faithful to her engagements, might miss me. So I lingered on there until ten days went slowly by; then, just as I was beginning to despair, a letter came.

It was written in a delicate pointed Italian style and signed Manuel Ceneri. It simply said that the writer would have the honor of calling upon me about noon to-day.

Nothing was hinted at as to the object of the visit, but I knew it could be connected with only one thing—the desire of my heart. Teresa, after all, had not played me false. Pauline would be mine. I waited with feverish impatience until this unknown Manuel Ceneri should make his appearance.

A few minutes after twelve he was announced and shown into my room. I recognized him at once. He was the middle-aged man with rather round shoulders who had talked to Teresa under the shade of San Giovanni at Turin. Doubtless he was "il dottore" spoken of by the old woman as being the arbiter of Pauline's fate.

He bowed politely as he entered, cast one quick look at me as if trying to gather what he could from my personal appearance, then seated himself in the chair I offered him.

"I make no apology for calling," he said; "you will no doubt guess why I come." His English was fluent, but the foreign accent very marked.

"I hope I guess correctly," I replied.

"I am Manuel Ceneri. I am a doctor by profession. My sister was Miss March's mother. I have come from Geneva on your account."

"Then you know what the wish—the great wish of my life is?"

"Yes, I know. You want to marry my niece. Now, Mr. Vaughan, I have many reasons for wishing my niece to remain single, but your proposal has induced me to reconsider the matter."

Pauline might have been a bale of cotton, so impassively did her uncle speak of her future.

"In the first place," he went on, "I am told you are well born and rich. Is that so?"

"My family is respectable. I am well connected and may be called rich."

"You will satisfy me on the latter point, I suppose."

I bowed stiffly, and taking a sheet of paper wrote a line to my solicitors asking them to give the bearer the fullest information as to my resources. Ceneri folded up the note and placed it in his pocket. Perhaps I showed the annoyance I felt at the necessary exactness of his inquiries.

"I am bound to be particular in this matter," he said, "as my niece has nothing."

"I expect nothing or wish for nothing."

"She had money once—a large fortune. It was lost long ago. You will not ask how or where?"

"I can only repeat my former words."

"Very well—I feel I have no right to refuse your offer. Although she is half Italian her manners and habits are English. An English husband will suit her best. You have not yet, I believe, spoken of love to her?"

"I have had no opportunity. I should no doubt have done so, but as soon as our acquaintance commenced she was taken away."

"Yes, my instructions to Teresa were strict. It was only on condition she obeyed her that I allowed Pauline to live in England."

Although this man spoke as one who had absolute authority over his niece, he had not said one word which evinced affection. So far as that went, she might have been a stranger to him.

"But now, I suppose," I said, "I shall be allowed to see her?"

"Yes—on conditions. The man who marries Pauline March must be content to take her as she is. He must ask no questions, seek to know nothing of her birth and family, nothing of her early days. He must be content to know that she is a lady, that she is very beautiful, and that he loves her. Will this suffice?"

The question was such a strange one that even in the height of my passion I hesitated.

"I will say this much," added Ceneri, "she is good and pure—her birth is equal to your own. She is an orphan and her only near relative is myself."

"I am content," I cried, holding out my hand to seal the compact. "Give me Pauline, I ask no more."

Why should I not be content? What did I want to know about her family, her antecedents or her history? So madly did I long to call that beautiful girl mine that, I believe had Ceneri told me she was worthless and disgraced among women, I should have said, "give her to me and let her begin life anew as my wife." Men do such things for love!

"Now, Mr. Vaughan," said the Italian, drawing his hand from mine; "my next question will astonish you. You love Pauline and I believe she is not indifferent to you——"

Mashed But Mistaken.

Within a private box she sat, a vision bright and fair—
It seemed to me I never saw a beauty half so rare.
Rich jewels glistened at her throat, and in her laughing eyes
There glistened vagrant little gems from summer's cloudless skies.
The comedy was on and all the people round me laughed
At quip or jest, but my glad soul a draught of nectar quaffed
So deep and so ecstatic that I minded not the play—
The vision in the private box drove grosser thoughts away!

Then as I gazed methought her eyes—twin orbs of light—met mine—
They sent me beams of precious gleams, half human, half divine,
And in my heart there softly rose a music sweet and low,
That into happy lays of love changed all my songs of wo.
Then suddenly a smile chased merry dimples o'er her face—
She bowed, and as she bent her head I felt infused with grace;
Strange hopes arose within me—then I saw, oh, misery!
That she had recognised the man who sat in front of me!

Joaquin Miller is anxious to have all kinds of tools put on the list of studies in the public schools. This is what converted him: "I attended court the other day," he says, "in a civil case, and the young lawyer provoked the contempt of all present by his ignorance of the simplest principles of mechanical industry. Think of a young lawyer leaning back and asking the witness to explain to the jury, 'what is a jack-plane?'" It cost him his case. Of course the fellow was a fool, and would probably have lost it anyway. But you can clearly see how much better it would be for a lawyer, every professional man indeed, to know about all mechanics, if that knowledge could be carried on as a sort of healthful exercise during his school days."

The following, from the Philadelphia Bulletin, is something for the young man to consider during the heated term: "There are plenty of people who declare that the best thing a young man can do is to marry and settle down in earnest to domestic life, and there are others who declare with the same emphasis that the opposite course is the correct one to pursue. Giving both sides of the argument proper weight, the choice is left with the young man. One who can give his wife a home, no matter how modest it may be, no doubt is justified in taking a partner for life, but it does seem to be the utmost folly for a young man to take a girl away from home of her parents and subject her to discomforts which she must bear uncomplainingly for love's sake. This thing is a more common occurrence than the most people imagine, and it accounts for about one-half the misery of the world. Elegance and wealth are not indispensable to the happiness of sensible people, but a certain amount of provision must be made."

A ten-foot shark and a seven-foot alligator met by chance in East Pass, Appalachicola Bay, Fla. When his sharkship spied the alligator he went for him at a lively rate, cleaving the water with incredible rapidity. The alligator stood his ground and waited the onslaught with blinking eyes and open mouth. Seeing his antagonist prepared for him the wily shark made only a seeming attempt at attack, and rushed by his gatorship with increased velocity. When a few feet only intervened, the shark, by a turn known only to this fish, wheeled with lightning rapidity and pounced upon his enemy. Quick as the movement was it did not succeed. As the saurian and fish came together there was a terrible churning of the phosphorescent water for a moment, and then the shark darted off a few feet, turned once more upon its stomach, and his ponderous jaws closed upon the saurian's middle. There then was a crushing of bones and flesh for a second, the water was dyed with the saurian's life blood and then one-half of the defeated foe was seen to disappear down the cavernous throat of the shark.

The Daily Examiner.

MONDAY, AUGUST 3, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Bridgenorth Regatta.

Don't forget that Thursday, Aug. 6th, is the date of the Bridgenorth regatta, and don't forget that there will be several exciting rowing events contested.

Baptist Church.

The Rev. A. E. St. Dalmas preached at this church both morning and evening yesterday, the regular pastor, Rev. A. Munro, being away on his vacation.

Organ Recitals.

Prof. Parker will shortly give a series of organ recitals in the lecture room of St. Paul's Church, in which he will be assisted by a number of his pupils from Guelph, Woodstock and other places.

For the Rifle Association.

Two thousand rounds of rifle ammunition are on the way from Kingston for the Peterborough Rifle Association. Some of it will find its billet at the butts on Thursday, when the monthly rifle matches take place.

Life, Love and Death.

During the month of July there were registered with the town clerk nineteen births, thirteen marriages and eight deaths. This is an encouraging record, the increase of population during the above period being eleven net, a very high ratio and a very large percentage of births over deaths.

A Local Composer.

The Bobcaygeon Independent thus speaks of the Batoche Polka, the composition of Miss Annie Delaney, of this town: —"It is bright, dashing, well marked and full of soul to the dancer. It is certain to become popular and hold a lasting reputation."

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Strong winds, and moderate gales from east and north, mostly cloudy, comparatively cool weather, with rain in southern Ontario.

A Narrow Escape.

A man named Robert Allan had a narrow escape from death on Saturday afternoon by falling from a barn near the boundary of Otonabee and Douro. He slipped and fell a distance of 25 feet, head foremost, and had it not been that another man working on the spot, caught him and broke the fall, it would probably have proved fatal. His injuries, which were of a trifling character, were attended to by Dr. King.

Base Ball.

The Men from Bethany Again Defeated by the Home Nine.

The return match between the Bethanys and the Peterboroughs took place on Saturday afternoon in Riverside Park, and was attended by a fair concourse of spectators, a large number of the gentle sex showing their appreciation of the game by turning out to witness it. In the previous match the visitors were badly defeated, and they came to town on Saturday filled with a desire to avenge themselves. In this, however, they were disappointed, as will be seen by the appended score. The new battery of the Peterboroughs proved too much for the visitors, the majority of whom retired on three strikes, and also proved themselves good men at the bat and at base running, each of them scoring two out of the total of eight runs placed to the credit of their club. The following are the members of the respective teams:

Peterboroughs		Bethanys.
O'Neil	Catcher	Sisson
Moore	Left Field	Jennings
Sanderson	Short Stop	R. Gillies
Sullivan	Pitcher	Robinson
Metheral	1st Base	Reynolds
Campbell	2nd Base	Douglas
Metheral, A.	Centre Field	Lindsay
Cameron	Right Field	Strike
Rogers	3rd Base	Gillies

Robinson and Richard Gillies, who made 2 and 1 runs respectively, were the only players who scored for the visitors, who did not appear to be at all equal to the home team. Indeed, had it not been for the rather questionable decisions of the umpire, a gentleman named Campbell, who, although perhaps actuated by the best intentions, did not seem to understand his duties, the disparity in the scores would have been even greater. The following is the score by innings:

With more practice the local team will play a rattling game, and the contest for the championship between them and the Lindsay club, which takes place on Tuesday, is certain to prove an exciting and closely contested event.

St. Paul's Church.

The pulpit of St. Paul's was occupied yesterday by Rev. Mr. Roger, of London, Ont. This gentlemen will continue to officiate until the return of Rev. Mr. Torrance, who is spending a six weeks holiday among the islands of the St. Lawrence.

The Fire Brigade in Lack.

At the big fire in Toronto this morning, the steamer Chicora, which is to be used in the Firemen's excursion to Niagara Falls on August 11th, had a narrow escape. She is, however, all right, and ready for the excursion party on the 11th.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	77°	28.95°
1 o'clock	82°	28.83°
3 o'clock	82°	28.80°

Central Iron Works.

The Central Iron Works are doing a big business. They this morning shipped two iron bridges—highway iron bridges, low truss—to Perth County, a few miles distant from Stratford. They are respectively 64 and 44 feet long. Mr. Law has an order from the same county for another bridge, and also an order for a bridge of 114 feet span and 14 feet wide for the village of Florence, in Lambton County. These works are also supplying a bridge 50 feet long, for Arthur, Wellington County, and have completed detailed drawings for the iron work of the new bridge to be erected at Wallace Point, work upon which will be begun at once.

Succumbed to his Injuries.

Thomas Gullet, the brakeman who was crushed while coupling cars in the G. T. R. yard on Saturday morning, in spite of the most careful treatment by his medical attendant, Dr. King, succumbed to his injuries and died at the C. P. R. hotel at five o'clock Sunday evening. It appears that the deceased himself had strong hopes of recovery. A short time before his death he combatted the gloomy views his attendant, a fellow workman, took of his case, and said he hoped soon to be about on crutches. Instead, however, he was in a short time a corpse. His remains were taken charge of by Mr. D. Belleghem, undertaker, and after the funeral service had been read over them by Rev. F. H. Wallace, were removed by the early train this morning to Roblin's Mills, Prince Edward county, of which place the deceased brakeman was in his lifetime a resident.

Rain and Wind.

The rain that set in this morning and continued with slight intermissions most of the day was a welcome one in town. Though some farmers may regret it, the wet having a tendency to colour the barley and decrease its value, yet to the gardens and lawns in town it is a decided benefit. The trees in several parts of the town showed signs of dying, the leaves shrivelling and turning yellow. The rain will revive them, and also the gardens, which were fast going to the bad. The wind that accompanied the rain must have done considerable damage. In town hundreds of umbrellas were fitted for the mender, and in Ashburnham two large trees were destroyed. One was a huge willow on the east side of Lake street, which was prostrated and filled the width of the street. A portion of a big elm in Riverside Park, near the water, was also broken down.

Smokers!

Beware of cigars artificially flavored for the purpose of hiding the poor quality of tobacco used in flavored cigars. Insist upon having the old reliable brands—"CABLA" and "EL PADRE." 13d-25w-1y

Accident on the G.T.R.

An Engine and Seven Cars Jump the Track Near Keene—The Fireman is Slightly Injured.

An accident occurred on Saturday afternoon to the way freight train going east on the Grand Junction branch of the Midland Division of the G.T.R., which leaves here about 4 o'clock p.m. When it had arrived within a short distance of Keene the locomotive left the rails and was followed by seven of the cars, some of which upset and completely blocked the track. The engineer and fireman were William Mallock and Robert O'Hagan. The latter made his exit through the window of the cab while the engine was still moving, and in doing so was struck and slightly injured by the driving rod connecting the engine wheels. A special train was sent down on Saturday evening to meet Conductor Morris' train at the scene of the accident, and the passengers were transferred and arrived safely, though somewhat behind time, in Peterborough. Yesterday a wrecking train cleared the track of the obstruction and traffic will proceed as usual. The damage to the derailed cars is said to be slight.

Personal.

Messrs. John Ludgate, of Ashburnham, and N. Shaw, of Charlotte street, town, started on Monday morning for the back lakes, where they will spend a week in camping and fishing.

Lindsay.

A Monument to Commemorate the Deeds of Company C, Midland.

LINDSAY, Aug. 1.—The townspeople intend commemorating the bravery of Company C, (Midland) by erecting a handsome drinking fountain in the market place. The The project of presenting a handsome stand of colours to the battalion will probably be consummated.

Illustrated War News.

The Grip Printing and Publishing Co, have issued their Reception Number of the Illustrated War News. This number is one of unusual interest. It contains sixteen pages, and the illustrations are entirely composed of scenes in connection with the return of the volunteers from the Northwest. The publishers sent special artists to Winnipeg and other principal points to report and illustrate the proceedings, and have gone to considerable expense in getting authentic sketches of the various demonstrations all over the Dominion.

A racy account of incidents and experiences of the troops returning home is written by Capt. C. W. Allan, who accompanied some of them from Port Arthur, and it is illustrated by J. W. Bengough in his best style.

This number is, in every respect, the best which has yet been issued, and is worthy of being sent away to friends all over the world as a representation of the receptions tendered our returning heroes.

We understand there has been already an enormous demand for this issue, and the publishers have had great difficulty in filling orders. Certainly everybody who appreciates the work done by our brave volunteers should have a copy.

The publishers will mail copies post paid on receipt of the price, 15c., or it can be obtained from all news dealers. The Toronto News Co. are the wholesale agents.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w-1y

The Wrong Court.

William Chamberlain, keeper of a hotel and restaurant, was charged by Robert Kelly at the Police Court this morning with non payment of wages, the amount alleged to be due the complainant being $68. As sums of more than $40 cannot be recovered through the Police Court, Mr. Kelly was informed that he must bring suit in Division Court, a course which he intends following.

Hazel Brae Remembered Abroad.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist congregation at Morven gave a lawn social last Thursday evening, July 30th, on behalf of the Hazel Brae Home. The pastor, Rev. J. A. Jewell, B. A., and his amiable wife threw open the parsonage and grounds for the occasion, and by their genial kindness added much to the enjoyment of the evening. The entertainment was a real success, socially and financially, and reflected great credit on the kind hearts and skillful hands that had suggested and managed the arrangements.

Both Sides to Blame.

William Shuter was arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble this morning on a charge of neglecting to contribute to the support of his family. His wife and two daughters, who were in court, stated that for several months past he had only contributed $6.50 in cash, a little bread and meat, and a bag of potatoes, to the support of the family, but admitted that he paid the rent, and could not say what he earned. The defendant in turn, complained of his wife's treatment, and as the thing seemed pretty evenly balanced, the magistrate dismissed the case, recommending Shuter to have a little more ambition in supporting his family.

North Monaghan Outrages.

The township of North Monaghan has for a long time been regarded as a model "settlement." The people pay their taxes regularly and frequently, and to the cent. But recently the even tenor of the people's way has been varied by a little pistol practice, and now agrarian outrages are being added to the criminal calendar. On Friday Mr. Wm. Collins discovered a four months old thoroughbred Durham heifer, the progeny of the noted bull, Lord Nelson in an injured condition in the field. Dr. Crevier, town, was sent for, but the life of the animal could not be saved. After death an examination revealed that the animal had apparently been beaten with a heavy club to such an extent that in some places the flesh under the skin was reduced to a jelly. These injuries were no doubt the cause of the death.

On Friday evening some malicious person opened the fence of a field of Mr. Wm. Foster, along the line of the C. P. R., and a good cow strayed on the track and was killed.

Only a short time ago a valuable cow belonging to Mr. Wm. Hook was badly maltreated and abused. A sharp instrument like the tine of a hay fork was thrust through one of the animal's teats and a blow with a bludgeon displaced her "pin" bone, greatly reducing her value.

It is a little remarkable that the victims of all these outrages bear the Christian name of William.

Probable Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—South-west and west winds, fresh to strong during the day, clearing, warm weather.

A Fatal Brick.

Charles Manning, a carpenter working at the Claxton house, on Simcoe street, met with a painful accident this afternoon. A brick falling from the scaffold, beneath which he was at work, struck his head and inflicted a rather serious scalp wound, which rendered the services of Dr. King necessary. After the wound had been dressed Mr. Manning was taken to his home.

The Crops and the Rain.

Reports from various parts of the surrounding country indicate that considerable damage will result to the grain crops from the heavy winds and rain of yesterday. From nearly all directions come reports of standing barley crops laid low, and there will be much discoloration, not only in barley cut before the rain, but in fully ripe standing crops. Fall wheat had mostly been already harvested and there will not be much damage to it, but spring wheat will suffer somewhat. The root crop and peas will, no doubt, be benefited by the rain. A report from the Whitby district, date Aug. 3rd, states that the grain harvest was begun there last week and was expected to be through during the present. In spring wheat, which is largely cultivated there, some complaints of rust was heard, but a full average crop was looked for. Peas were a promising crop. Reports of rust among oats were made, but a large crop in general was promised. The excessive heat had struck the barley in light lands and where poorly cultivated, and where it was late, nevertheless a full average yield was anticipated.

Let Us Have Music.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER :

DEAR SIR,—Now that Court House Park is thrown open to the public, I have begun to long for some more of the delightful serenades with which the Fire Brigade Band has often favored us in the same place. I am informed that the new gasalier for the park will soon be placed in position. When that is done I suggest that steps be taken to induce the band to provide us with some of the excellent music they are so thoroughly capable of rendering. Let us have some good open air music before the summer closes. I might appeal to the Horticultural Society to use their influence in this direction; but they have done so much in connection with beautifying the park, that it almost seems a shame to ask any more of them. I trust the band boys will take the hint.

Yours, etc.,
THOROUGHBASS.

Town, August 4th, 1885.

An Explanation.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER :

DEAR SIR,—I was sorry to perceive in your issue of Saturday a communication from Major R. W. Bell, of the 57th Battalion, with reference to our having used his name on a poster, announcing a ball to be given by the members of "G" Company, Midland Battalion who have at learned during their North-West experience, dicipline and the respect due their superior officers. On behalf of "G" Company, I beg to apologize to Major Bell for having used his name, and at the same time to make a short explanation of the matter. The committee of management appointed to conduct the affair waited on several officers of the battalion and from all of them received the heartiest promises of support and encouragement, including permission to use thier names as patrons or honorary members. Col. Rogers being out of town we could not see him personally, but we were assured by one who should know that it would be all right to use his name, as he would be only too glad to do all in his power to assist us. There was no time to be lost in getting out the posters as the date was close at hand and we inquired several places for Major Bell, but not being able to find him we concluded to take the liberty of putting his name on the posters along with that of Col. Rogers as honorary officers, feeling confident that neither he nor Col. Rogers would have any objections, and being led to believe so by many circumstances. I think with all due respect, Major Bell makes a slight mistake in assuming 'that an honorary member of any organization is to be held responsible for the management of the same, and to the best of my recollection the Prince of Wales and many other noted personages in Great Britain are honorary members of societies in Canada, of whose existence they are not aware. In this respect, and in this respect only did we make use of his name, and if we have injured it in any way we are heartily sorry for it, and beg to respectfully apologize.

Yours truly,
ONE OF COMPANY "G."

DEGIERS AND GLADSTONE.

The True Inwardness of Russia's Course.

Russia's Hopes and Aims.

VIENNA, Aug. 2.—The Polish journal Czar, brings from St. Petersburgh some important revelations regarding the relations of Russia and England.

The writer states that Mr. Gladstone's fall made a great impression in St. Petersburg. After the defeat of the Afghans at Penjdeh there was great patriotic excitement and exultation in court circles. The czar himself demanded an immediate advance of the Russian troops in Afghanstan. M. de Giers, however, ventured the opinion that Russia should rather build a "golden bridge" for Mr. Gladstone.

In a council of ministers, at which the czar presided' M. de Giers said : "Gladstone has been very useful in Russia. His fall must increase Russia's difficulties in Asia and Europe." Gladstone said M. de Giers was the creator of the Three Kaiser Alliance. Austria, through her dislike of the English premier, had been constrained to attach herself closer to Russia. Russia should therefore support Gladstone.

These remarks of M. de Giers evoked a storm of disapprobation in the council of ministers. The Czar rose, and striking the table, thundered to M. de Giers : "Giers imagines that he is a constitutional minister. I and Russia want war. Not a step will we recede."

In order to change the Czar's decision Oberst Zakrzewski, of the Central Asian army, was summoned to make a report to the Council. In the second meeting of the Council of Ministers Oberst Zakrzewski reported that a further advance of the Russians in Afghanistan was impossible, that a desert lay in front of the Russian troops, and that the climate would prove a fatal obstacle to the advance.

The Emperor then apologized to M. de Giers, saying : "Thou wert right."

M. de Giers then answered the Czar :—"My former opinion has no weight now. Mr. Gladstone, I learn, has fallen. Now we have to do with Salisbury, and his attitude at the Berlin congress was obnoxious to us."

RUSSIA'S HOPES AND AIMS.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The frank statements in Russian papers that the Zulficar pass matter will be kept open until the English elections are over have increased the feeling that war is inevitable, and the steps which the Government are taking to get ready for it receive unanimous assent. The appointment of Gen. Roberts to Indian control is hailed even by the Radical papers as admirable, and the statement that an entrenched camp is to be forthwith constructed in the Peshin Valley is generally welcome. The Russian papers confess dismay at El Mahdi's death, as giving Lord Salisbury a freer hand in Central Asia, and the Novoe Vremyo fully expresses the hope that Russian diplomacy will find a way to prolong the English embarrassment in Egypt. The Vredmositi prints articles daily on England's decline as a mercantile and military power.

General Grant's Tomb.

The site chosen for Grant's tomb is on a sort of promontory on the Hudson River, and is the highest point in Manhattanville. The spot suggests revolutionary war memories. Fort Lee is opposite, the old fort in Central Park is on the north, and the highlands near West Point shut in the horizon beyond Tappan See. No structures can be erected to break the uniformity of the view. The site is remote from the lines of travel, and about eight miles from the City Hall. It was Gen. Grant's own wish that he should be buried in New York.

Butchered by Indians.

Eight White Persons Treacherously Killed by Indians in the Cypress Hills.

REGINA, N.W.T., Aug. 1.—Eight whites have been butchered by marauding Indians, thirty-eight miles south of Maple Creek, in the Cypress hills. It is believed that the Indians came on the victims by stealth, and when a favorable opportunity presented itself, pounced upon them. Some of those attacked escaped by swimming and wading across the narrow lake, and barricading themselves in Sands' lumber mill. Thirty-eight police left here by train about 5 o'clock this morning for the scene of the butchery, and a like number from Medicine Hat. Great excitement is said to exist amongst the settlers around Maple creek. If the Indians begin guerilla warfare, it will be worse than the rebellion.

A Murderous Plot

To Destroy a House and Sacrifice Human Lives.

NEW YORK, August 3.—Information of one of the most elaborate incendiary plots on record was sent to the police station and fire headquarters to-day. The five story tenement, No. 26 Canal street, was found to be mined and fixed in a most thorough manner with powder trains and fuel and shavings soaked in alcohol, for a noctural conflagration that would have imperilled half a hundred lives. The plot miscarried by accident. The proprietor of a barber's saloon on the first floor, an Italian by the name of Frankseracca, has fled, and is hunted by the police as the projector of the crime.

Squashed the Baby.

The story comes from Medicine Hat that one of the boys went to an Indian lodge to visit his sweetheart, and sat down on what he supposed was a bundle of blankets. His visit lasted about twenty minutes, when he got up and left. All at once the lady remembered her baby, and on going to look at it, found that the life had been completely crushed out of it. Our hero had sat on the baby for twenty long minutes, with the above result.—Fort McLeod Gazette.

An Inhospitable Coast.

It is said that the seas in the Australian coasts are heavier than anywhere else in the world. For hundreds of miles black beetling cliffs from 400 to 600 feet high extend without an opening of any kind into which a distressed ship might run for safety. Round the base of these cliffs the crested hills of angry waves surge and roar, swept along with terrible force by winds born at the southern pole, and which, careering over thousands of miles of sea, have encountered land here for the first time.

Newbold to the Last.

He Was a Russian Count.

A Columbus, Ohio, despatch gives the following respecting Newbold, the man of many wives and many names :—"He was sent from Toledo last December for seven years, for bigamy. His father was an Englishman and his mother a Russian countess. He was a young man when he came to America, and he had not long been here before he had married fifteen different women. The last one was a daughter of Chas. J. Whitney, the wealthy opera house manager, of Detroit, Mich. He won Miss Whitney's affections while employed as her father's coachman. He was sick for the last two weeks with intermittent fever, and a few days ago told the Warden that his real name was Charles Edward Neuville Consiwiecki, his Russian title being Count. He always claimed that he had but one wife, and that he was always true to her."

Lightning's Freaks.

The superstitious will find abundant cause for ominous conjectures in the freaks of the lightning since Gen. Grant died. On Wednesday a severe storm forced the men to cease work on his tomb and an electric shaft destroyed a great oak tree within a few paces of the spot where the dead hero will lie. During the evening of the same day the cottage on Mount McGregor was struck by lightning and the electric light above the casket was extinguished.

Dairy Business.

There are 550 butter and cream factories in Iowa, 497 in Illinois, 130 in Wisconsin, 100 in Kansas, 100 in Minnesota, 61 in Missouri, 50 in Indiana and 40 in Nebraska—a total of 1,788 in eight States. The value of the dairy products in Iowa alone in 1884 was $50,000,000, and that of the United States was $500,000,000. The value of the milch cows of the United States is put at $700,000,000 in excess of the entire capital stock of all the National Banks and trust companies in the country.

Exercise and Air.

A correspondent writes to the London Spectator: "I believe that you hit the nail on the head when you wrote that 'to sit for an hour daily in the open air is the best restorative for persons who must lead sedentary lives.' I should go further, and say, let them do some of their work in the open air, or at least by an open window. We cannot live in the open air, as so many people do all the Summer in countries that enjoy a drier climate; but in England it is possible to work on most days for some hours out of doors. Even in Winter one can often read and write in a sheltered nook on the south side of a house during the middle of the day, provided one is wrapped up, and has the knees and ears well covered, wearing a slouch hat to protect the eyes from glare. Much health might even be gained from our London balconies, in the quieter parts of the town, if it were more habitual to use them.

"Any one who tries a morning reading or writing in the open air will feel no exhaustion, compared with what the same work indoors would have produced; and, moreover, he will feel the wish for exercise, as well as the power to take it, and will pace up and down his balcony, if he cannot get further. (You speak contemptuously of 'deck-pacing,' but it is the natural resource of delicate persons, who know that, though the walk out is refreshing, the return journey means exhaustion, and wisely accept an alternative, which enables them to stop before over-fatigue is involved). A small conservatory is very helpful where a balcony is unsaitainable, or 'le grand air' too much for the constitution. In either case, all that is wanted to make a comfortable, open-air study is a folding garden-chair, which throws up the knees so as to form a desk; and a low stool, for ink-stand, books, etc. Care should be taken to close the windows into the room behind, or draught is inevitable. What are called 'French windows' are the most convenient, as being most easily opened from without."

RIEL'S SENTENCE.

Riel has had a fair trial and has been found guilty. Considering the directness of his complicity—nay more than that—his being the head and front of the rebellion, with a strong determination to overthrow the Queen's authority in the Northwest, hardly any other result could have been reached. But now the strife as to his final, fate really begins. With the waywardness and inconsistency which we have ceased to wonder at, injuries the jury in pronouncing him guilty added a recommendation to mercy. If the jury decided that Riel was guilty, then he should be considered to be entitled to justice only, not mercy; if they had a doubt of his guilt he should have had the benefit of such a doubt. It seems more probable that the jury had in their minds the fact that Riel and his associates had great provocation; that by the action of the Government he and they, whose cause he championed, were goaded into the acts of rebellion, rapine and murder they committed. The recommendation of the unfortunate man to executive clemency means a severe condemnation of the Government, and it will be regarded as such by the people in general. It will be interesting to know what action the Government will take. It is often necessary to make an example of prominent offenders like Riel. The failure of the Government in 1870, no doubt, made the recent rebellion possible, if it did not contribute to and assist in promoting it. Riel was guilty of the murder of Thomas Scott at that time, and instead of being punished for it, he was, in a certain degree, rewarded. The shifty policy of Sir John Macdonald that led him to making Riel a money present, instead of dealing out a rope, naturally encouraged the rebel leader, and without doubt he counted on the chances of receiving similar lenient, not to say generous, treatment if he again defied authority and shed innocent blood.

Now Sir John has his case to deal with again, but under different circumstances. There can be no doubt of Riel's blood-guiltiness this time, nor any doubt that he appreciated the position he was assuming in the late rebellion, and it will be interesting to note what course will be taken. Simple justice demands the execution of the sentence of death against him. A wise public policy demands that an example be made to the end that the still rebellous Indians of the North-West may be shown that resistance to constituted authority cannot be made with impunity. Such a lesson is needed. Only yesterday news was received of the inauguration of a guerilla warfare in the North-West, in which the lives of several whites were sacrificed. Now, if Riel and the promoters of the late rising are allowed to escape without condign punishment, the savages will be encouraged in indulging their atrocious instincts and bloody massacres will be of frequent occurrence. And not only should the leaders in the late rebellion be strictly dealt with, but the people should at the first opportunity, bring the government to account, for they are morally responsible for the rebellion by being directly guilty of the causes that led to the lamentable uprising, whose suppression has cost scores of valuable lives and somewhere about eight millions of dollars of money.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Arrangements have been completed by the Government for the taking of the census of the Northwest Territories. Work will be commenced this month.

The Canadian exhibit to be sent to the Colonial Exposition will contain as good a display of our lumber and mineral resources as can be obtained.

The appointment of Thomas White, M.P., as Minister of the Interior, will be gazetted next Saturday. The Premier has decided not to wait till the general reconstruction of the Cabinet before making this appointment.

ACCIDENT.

On Saturday, while a party of men from Peterborough, in the employ of Mr. Aaron Cox, were passing through the village they managed to upset by turning too short. A Mr. Wm. Hopkins landed on his shoulder, which was dislocated. Medical aid was obtained, and after great difficulty, the bone was restored to its place, and Mr. Hopkins returned to town by train.

LUSUS NATURÆ.

About ten days since a mare belonging to Mr. Geo. Chalmers, Young's Point, dropped a foal which is unique in its development, having only three legs. One of the fore legs is missing and the other is almost in the centre of the body and is almost double the size of the leg of a colt the same age. The little thing is all right in other respects, and gets around on the three legs in good style, is growing fast, and likely to do well. Large numbers of the curious have been out to the farm, a mile beyond the Point, to see it.

ALMOST A FIRE.

On Friday evening, between 10 and 11, a couple of our citizens, in crossing the iron bridge, noticed a small fire between Mr. D. Smith's blacksmith shop and Chapin Bros. planing mill. Upon proceeding to the spot they found that a coal had been left from setting waggon tires in the afternoon and the wind had fanned it into flame, which was fast making its way among the refuse of the mill and in a few minutes would have got beyond control. Water was obtained and it was drowned out without any alarm being given. Great care should be taken in regard to fire, everything is so dry and as we do not possess any appliances, in case a large fire once starts everything in the way will have to go, and then we will again have meetings, &c., to discuss fire protection.

BLASTED HOPES.

One of our bachelor merchants is at present up the back lakes enjoying himself and showing his fair companions the beauties of nature, etc. Last Saturday morning it fell to his lot to visit McCraken's Landing for the daily camp supply of milk, which he secured and started on his homeward journey, trolling as he paddled along. He had not gone far when he got a bite, and, after a sharp struggle, landed a fine maskinonge into the canoe. The hooks at once came out, and the fish in its struggles upset the milk pail. Our hero in his efforts to save the milk forgot where he was and upset the canoe. As he was going out he grasped the fish by the tail and held on, determined to have fish for his breakfast, if not milk. He managed to right the canoe (half full of water) with the free hand, and then threw the fish in, satisfied he had it safe at last. Mr. fish, restored to his native element (the little water in the canoe), considered the quarters to confined, and with a dash and leap disappeared from the astonished gaze of George, over the end of the canoe. Mr. James Stenson, of Peterborough, boot and shoe merchant, who was camped near by, and who had been watching the fun, paddled out and towed our friend ashore, wet and hungry, and with neither milk nor fish, but fully impressed with the truth of the old Scotch proverb, that "the best laid plans of men and mice gang aft aglee.

How to Get a Drink in Maine.

In Maine none of the common styles of invitation prevails. It is all shrouded in mystery. You give the sign of distress to any member in good standing, pound three times on the outer gate, give two hard kicks and one soft one on the inner door, give the password, "Rutherford B. Hayes," turn to the left, through a dark passage, turn the thumbscrew of a mysterious gas fixture 90 degrees to the right, holding the goblet of the encampment under the gas fixture; then reverse the thumbscrew, shut your eyes, insult your digester, leave twenty-five cents near the gas fixture and hunt up the nearest cemetery, so that you will have not be carried very far.—Boston Globe.

Mrs. Leslie's Diamonds.

Frank Leslie died leaving his printing house terribly involved. Mrs. Leslie has redeemed it. She says:

"I had the property in reach and the assignees were ready to turn it over to me, but to get it it was necessary for me to raise $50,000. I borrowed the money, and I borrowed it from a woman. How happy I was when she signed the check, and how beautiful it seemed to me to see one woman helping another. I borrowed the money in June, and was to make the first payment of $5,000 on the 1st of November. On the 29th of October I paid back the $50,000 with interest. From June to the 29th of October I made $50,000 clear. I had also to pay $30,000 to the creditors who did not come under the contract. While I was paying this $30,000 of my husband's debts, I spent but thirty dollars for myself except for board. I lived in a little attic room without a carpet and the window was so high that I could not get a glimpse of the sky unless I stood on a chair and looked out. When I had paid the debts and raised a monument to my husband, then I said to myself, 'now for a great big pair of diamond earrings,' and away I went to Europe and here are the diamonds."

The diamonds are perfect matches, twenty seven carats in weight and are nearly as large as nickels.—Interview in the Atlanta Constitution.

El Mebdi's Right Hand.

One night of May, eleven years ago, in a dingy back room of an old brick house in Wooster street, I met a young Frenchman who even then had played a part which had doubtless prepared him for the extraordinary adventure in which he is now engaged. He was amid a group of his friends, and just reached the city as a refugee. He had been an actor in the Paris revolt of March, 1871; he had escaped the massacre that followed the suppression of the commune; he had afterward been arrested and condemned to death; his punishment had been changed to that of banishment to the penal colony of New Caledonia, in the Pacific; he had there, with a few companions, got up a daring plan of escape; they had carried out that plan amid dangers as great as ever were encountered, and in May of 1874 the little party of fugitives had arrived in San Francisco, from where Mr. Olivier Pain hastened to New York, where he spent a few days prior to his departure for England as a place of safety.

When here he looked about 30 years of age, and was tall, lithe and handsome, possessed of both the vivacity and the gravity of an experienced worldling of Paris. He had done duty on the press as an assailant of the empire; he had done service in the field during the Franco-German war, and subsequently during the revolt of Paris; he had suffered the hardships of French convict life, and was then in full flight from one kind of peril to another; but, withal, he demeaned himself as though his resources had not yet been tested.

Well, according to the cable dispatches, this young Frenchman, Mr. Olivier Pain, has for the past year been the military adviser of the "false prophet," who is now leading his wild hordes of Arabian spearman against the British invaders of Egypt and the Soudan; and it is this same Frenchman who led the storming party that captured Khartoum and put an end to the career of Gen. Gordon. It is a long distance from Paris to New Caledonia, and from Wooster street to Soudan, but Mr. Pain has measured it; it is a queer change from convict and fugitive to his present rank in the host of the "faithful," but he has undergone it. As far back as last year the dispatches told of a mysterious Frenchman who was reported to be in the Arab camp, and was high in the confidence of El Medhi; but it was not till last January that we were assured of Mr. Pain's being in command of thirteen thousand of the Medhi's troops in Metemmeh; now we have the news of his victory at Khartoum, under which the British government is now reeling.

Mr. Pain had a varied experience after leaving New York. He went to London, and next to Geneva, where he was concerned in several newspaper ventures. When the Turko-Russian war broke out he entered the Turkish service, was captured by the Russians, and condemned to death as a spy, but the sentence was not executed, and he got out of prison in time to return to France and to Parisian journalism under the amnesty of 1880. It was as a correspondent that he penetrated to the camp of El Mehdi, where his knowledge of the art of war brought him to the front. The English papers have given notice that he will be hanged as soon as Lord Wolseley gets hold of him.—John Swinton's Paper.

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter IV—Continued.

He paused, and my heart beat at the thought.

"Will your arrangements permit an early marriage—an immediate marriage? Can I, upon my return to the Continent in a few days, leave her future in your hands entirely?"

"I would marry her to-day if it were possible," I cried.

"We need not be so impetuous as that, but could you arrange for, say the day after to-morrow?"

I stared at him—I could scarcely believe I heard correctly. To be married to Pauline within a few hours! There must be something in the background of such bliss! Ceneri must be a madman! Yet, even from the hands of a madman, how could I refuse my happiness?

"But I don't know if she loves me—would she consent?" I stammered.

"Pauline is obedient, and will do as I wish. You can woo her after her marriage instead of before it."

"But can it be done on so short a notice?"

"I believe there are such things as special licenses to be bought. You are wondering at my suggestion. I am bound to return to Italy almost at once. Now, I put it to you—can I, under the present circumstances, leave Pauline here with only a servant to look after her? No, Mr. Vaughan, strange as it may seem, I must either see her your wife before I leave or I must take her back with me. The latter may be unfortunate for you, as here I have only myself to consider, while abroad there may be others to consult, and perhaps I might change my mind."

"Let us go to Pauline and ask her," I said, rising impatiently.

"Certainly," said Ceneri, gravely, "we will go at once."

Till now I had been sitting with my back to the window. As I faced the light I noticed the Italian doctor look very straightly at me.

"Your face seems quite familiar to me, Mr. Vaughan, although I cannot recall where I have seen you."

I told him he must have seen me outside San Giovanni while he was talking to old Teresa. He remembered the occurrence and appeared satisfied. Then we called a cab and drove to Pauline's new abode.

It was not so very far away. I wondered I had not encountered either Pauline or Teresa in my rambles. Perhaps they had both kept to the house to avoid the meeting.

"Would you mind waiting in the hall a minute?" asked Ceneri as we entered the house. "I will go and prepare Pauline for your coming."

I would have waited a month in a dungeon for the reward in prospect; so I sat down on the polished mahogany chair and wondered if I was in my right senses.

Presently old Teresa came to me. She looked scarcely more amiable than before.

"Have I done well?" she whispered in Italian.

"You have done well—I will not forget."

"You will pay me and blame me for nothing. But listen—once more I say it—the signorina is not for love or marriage."

Superstitious old fool! Were Pauline's charms to be buried in a nunnery!

Then a bell rang and Teresa left me. In a few minutes she reappeared and conducted me up-stairs to a room in which I found my beautiful Pauline and her uncle. She raised her dark dreamy eyes and looked at me—the most infatuated man could not have flattered himself that the light of love was in them.

I fully expected that Dr. Ceneri would have left us to arrange matters alone; but no—he took me by the hand and in a stately manner led me to his niece.

"Pauline, you know this gentleman." She bowed. "Yes, I know him."

"Mr. Vaughan," continued Ceneri, "does us the honor of asking you to be his wife."

I could not permit all my wooing to be done by proxy, so I stepped forward and took her hand in mine.

"Pauline," I whispered, "I love you—since first I saw you I have loved you—will you be my wife?"

"Yes, if you wish it," she replied softly, but without even changing color.

"You cannot love me now, but you will by and by—will you not, my darling?"

She did not respond to my appeal, but then she did not repulse me, neither did she strive to withdraw her hand from mine; she remained calm and undemonstrative as ever; but I threw my arm round her, and, in spite of Ceneri's presence, kissed her passionately. It was only when my lips touched her own that I saw the color rise to her cheek and knew that she was moved.

She disengaged herself from my embrace, glanced at her uncle, who stood impassive as if he had witnessed nothing out of the common, and then she fled from the room.

"I think you had better go now," said Ceneri. "I will arrange everything with Pauline. You must do on your part all that is necessary for the day after to-morrow," I said.

"It is very sudden," I said.

"It is, but it must be so—I cannot wait an hour longer. You had better leave me now and return to-morrow."

I went away with my head in a whirl—I was uncertain what to do. The temptation to call Pauline my own in so short a time was great; but I could not deceive myself by thinking that she cared for me at all, as yet. But, as Ceneri said, I could do my wooing after marriage. Still I hesitated. The hurried proceeding was so strange. Ardently as I desired to wed Pauline I wished I could have first won her. Would it not be better to let her uncle take her to Italy, then to follow her and learn if she could love me? Against this prudent course came Ceneri's vague threat, that in such an event, his mind might be changed—and more than all, I was desperately in love. Although it could only be for her beauty that I loved her. I was madly in love. Fate had thrown us together. She had escaped me twice—now the third time she was offered to me unreservedly. I was superstitious enough to think that if I rejected or postponed accepting the gift, it would be withdrawn forever. No—come what will, in two days' time Pauline shall be my wife!

I saw her the next day, but never alone. Ceneri was with us all the time. Pauline was sweet, silent, shy, and languid. I had much to do—much to see to. Never was a wooing so short or so strange as mine. By the evening all arrangements were made, and by ten o'clock the next morning Gilbert Vaughan and Pauline March were man and wife—those two who had not in their lifetime even conversed for a time amounting, say, to three hours, were linked together for better or worse till death should part them.

Ceneri left immediately the ceremony was over, and, to my astonishment, Teresa announced her intention of accompanying him. She did not fail to wait on me for the promised reward, which I gave her freely and fully. My heart's desire was to wed Pauline, and by her aid it had been compassed.

Then, with my beautiful bride, I started for the Scottish lakes, to begin the wooing which should have been completed before the final step had been taken.

A Wicked Boy.

The wickedest boy lives in Washington. He visited the Observatory a few days ago with a large fire-fly he had caught, and with the aid of some mucilage stuck it in the center of the largest lense of the telescope. That night, when the astronomer went to work, he perceived a blaze of light apparently in the heavens, and what amazed him the more was that it would give a couple of spurts and then die out, only to burst forth again in a second or two. He examined it carefully for a few minutes and then began to do sums to find out where in the heavens that extraordinary star was placed. He thought he found the locality, and next morning he telegraphed all over the universe that he had discovered a new and remarkable star of the third magnitude in Orion; they gazed at it for hours until they were mad, and then they began to telegraph to the man in Washington to know what he meant. The discoverer took another look and found that the new star had moved 18,000,000,000 miles in twenty-four hours, and upon examining it closely was alarmed to perceive that it had legs. When he went on the dome next morning to polish up the glass he found the lightning-bug. The bill for telegraphing dispatches amounted to $2,600, and now the astronomer wants to find that boy.

Grant's Cigar.

Apropos of General Grant's illness, says a writer in The New York World, the late Thurlow Weed once told me a story that it recalls. I asked the venerable editor to what he attributed his firm health and length of days. "I see that Peter Cooper assigns rigid temperance as the cause of his," he answered with a laugh. "Mine is due, I think, to having always sat up all night and eaten and drank whatever I pleased. For forty years I took a hearty dinner, generally at 12 or 1 o'clock every night, and I never had any trouble to sleep. I always drank with the boys and politicians; I drank everything, but not much at a time, and for more than half a century I smoked ten or twelve cigars every day—when I could get them. In the summer of 1867, being in Saratoga, I lounged down to the spring one morning with a cigar in my mouth. On the way I met my old friend, Dr. Freeman, coming back with some other gentlemen. As we passed each other he leaned over to me and exclaimed, Stop smoking!' The salutation was so sudden and such an odd one that it stuck in my crop. I thought about it all day and wondered what it meant; and after dinner I called up at his room. He explained to me that he thought I had smoked long enough; that I was an old man, and habitual smoking was sure to hurt me—in fact, he wasn't sure but it had already hurt me. I was convinced, and told him I would never use the weed any more. He said I had better taper off, but I told him I didn't believe in taperings and would never smoke again. I never did. But I thought about it a good deal for awhile. I had written to Gen. Grant that he must be our candidate for president the next year. He had shown my letter to friends, and some correspondence had resulted. I came back to New York, and found a note from the general asking me to come and see him at Long Branch. I went down with John F. Henry. As we were talking, Gen. Grant took out his cigar case and offered us cigars, taking and lighting one himself. I took one, excused myself from smoking at the time, and stuck it in the breast pocket of my coat. Well, I became better acquainted with that cigar than I ever did with any other, for I carried it in that breast-pocket for a year and took it out every day—probably several times every day—and looked at it and smelt it and rolled it in my fingers and silly nibbled the end. But I never consumed it." And Mr. Wood transferred to the chair-back the pet pigeon he was fondling at the time, rose painfully from his seat, went across the room, and took from a drawer and handed to me a tough-looking cigar with both ends somewhat masticated. "That's it," he added; "I never smoked it, and now I don't want it."

Near Richmond, Va., is a farm house with some of the first window-panes brought to America. They are 10x12 in size and were already in the sash when brought here. At that time the use of putty was not known for glazing, the lights were held in place by strips of wood tacked against them. The cost of each light in England was about $3.

The Daily Examiner.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Encouraging Home Enterprise.

The Peterborough Water Company are putting "city water" into their offices and workshops on Hunter street.

Lindsay Central Exhibition.

We have received a copy of the prize list of the Lindsay Central Exhibition. The sum of $2,500 is offered in prizes. The pamphlet bears the imprint of the Lindsay Post, a fact to be inferred at a glance, from the neat and tasty typography which characterizes the brochure.

Contract Let.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. A. Rutherford, contractor, closed a contract with Mr. Wm. Lech for the construction of a double villa, to cost about $5,000. The buildings will face Stewart street, and will be placed on the eastern portion of the plot on which Mr. Lech's residence stands. We understand that a tenant is already secured for one of the residences.

The Biggest Sign in Town.

There has been placed on the Claxton Block, Hunter street front, (now owned by Mr. Geo. A. Cox) a large sign bearing the words, "Peterborough Business College," indicating the "local habitation and name" of that institution. The sign, which is 22 inches wide and 40 feet long, is one of the largest movable signs in town, and is done in the best style of the "Watsons, painters."

Effects of the Storm.

The storm of yesterday was general, at least all over the district covered by the Midland system of the G. T. R.—from Toronto to Midland, and from Belleville to Haliburton. The high wind produced crossing of the telegraph wires, and made train dispatching a most difficult undertaking. The consequence was that trains were delayed in waiting for orders, and the regular routine of traffic was considerably interfered with. In other ways, the vagaries of the storm were abundant. The ground is strewn with leaves of trees and broken twigs and branches, while in many parts entire trees are uprooted. In orchards and fruit gardens the ground is strewn with apples, etc., and where the fruit is unripe, serious loss has been caused.

Number the Streets.

That Peterborough is a progressive town is admitted on all hands. We were the first town in Canada to adopt the electric light, and there are probably more telephones in use here than in any town of similar size in country, Our wide awake store keepers have invested largely in plate glass, and on every hand evidences of our go-aheadism are to be seen. And yet in the midst of all this progressiveness, one thing which ought to have been attended to years ago, has been neglected. The houses on our streets have never been numbered, and strangers coming among us complain of the difficulty experienced in finding any place they want. Not long ago two ladies arrived here early in the morning by an excursion train from Cobourg, and wasted hours in the endeavour to find out a friend, owing to the absence of street numbering or a directory of the town. And strangers would not be the only gainers by a system of numbering. How many hours have been wasted by the messengers of storekeepers in endeavoring to find the residence of some person to whom a parcel was to be delivered? How many citizens have been annoyed and exasperated by knocks at their door late on Saturday night, followed by the inquiry: "Does Mr. Smith live here?" All these annoyances might be obviated by numbering the houses on every street, and when a town like Napanee saw the necessity for doing so half a dozen years ago it is surely time for us to take action in the matter. Any Councillor who will bring this matter up at the next Council meeting will earn the gratitude of both visitors and his fellow townsmen.

A Picturesque Pitch-Off.

How Engine 635 Went A-Huckleberrying.

The pitch-off on the Grand Junction on Saturday resulted in a most picturesque wreck, and there is enough mystery about the cause to make it interesting, while the narrow escape of the train hands makes cause for thankfulness. The pitch-off came without warning. No. 635 was bowling along comfortably, going about 16 or 18 miles an hour, with ten cars and a van in her wake. When about two miles this side of Keene she suddenly left the rails and bumped along for about thirty yards on the cross ties. She then turned sharply to the left almost at right angles with the line of rails and took a beader into the swamp, through which the track runs at this point. The tender, which had become detached, plunged on over the ties, and, going beyond her companion three or four times her length, parted with her trucks and the frame and tank tumbled to one side and flopped over completely upside down. The heavy sheet iron of the tank was crushed, jammed and crumpled till it resembled a gigantic black oyster can that had been trampled on by an elephant. When the engine left the track four of the cars following shot ahead of her for a short distance and then seemed to take to the swamp in search of huckleberries, which abound in the neighborhood. They were thrown, two on one side of the track and one on the other with the trucks badly damaged. Three of the seven cars which left the track did not leave the road bed, and were easily jacked onto the rails. The engine is of the swamp. When she made her wild plunge she tore off her smoke-stack, which remained stationary while the heavier part of the engine went deeper, leaving the stack about the middle of the boiler, only the tip of it visible through the mud. The engine lies on her right side. The cab is entirely demolished. When she left the rails Billy Mallock instinctively grasped the trottle with one hand and the lever with the other, and in this position he found himself sprawled out on the sharply sloping floor of the cab, when he came to a full stop in the swamp. When 635 listed over on her right side in the mud, with her left driving wheels still whizzing in the air, the fireman, Bob O'Hagan, in his hurry for fresh air, got his ribs tickled pretty vigorously with the side rod; but, fortunately, that was the only injury any one of the five hands on the train sustained. The escape, however, was a narrow one. Jack Way, after the little episode, said to some one who was chaffing him, "You may laugh now, but it was laughing matter at the time." He said he had only time to put on one brake when he saw the engine standing on her nose, the tender surging ahead on its own account, and the box cars bobbing about like a drummer's trunks fresh from the hands of a vigorous baggage smasher. As the engine stood on her head, with her heels in the air, with the tender on her face and the cars piled here and there in picturesque confusion, the fancy crossed his mind, "what a picture that would make!"

The freight from three of the cars was transferred and brought to town yesterday, and to-day, if the weather is favourable, efforts will be made to resurrect the buried engine, but it will be a most difficult and tedious task. The soft nature of the spongy soil leaves no point to work from to advantage.

The cause of the accident is a mystery. The track at this point is all right, and the rails are in their proper positions. It is supposed that the wheels of the engine spread, and thus caused the derailment.

Off for the Seaside.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Walsh, Mr. and Mrs. R. Innes, Mrs. T. G. Hazlitt, Miss Dickson and Miss Davidson, leave this evening for a month's seaside vacation at Old Orchard Beach, Maine.

Tricks of Horses.

During the storm yesterday afternoon a large pane of glass in the door of the C. P. R. ticket office, on George street, was blown in. About the same time a boy carrying a glass show case along the street had it blown out of his hands and broken.

Drowned in the Rapids.

Samuel Graham, a young man about 20 years of age, whose parents live in Ashburnham, and was in the employ of G. Hilliard, M. P., as a river driver was drowned on Sunday afternoon. He was running the Lovesick Rapids at Burleigh in a canoe and was upset, and the body had not, at latest reports, been recovered.

Postponed.

The championship baseball match between the Peterboroughs and the Lindsay club, which was to have taken place this afternoon, has been postponed until to-morrow, on account of the threatening appearance of the weather this morning. The Lindsays are bringing down a strong team, among them Reid, of the Torontos, who, it is said, will be their catcher, and there is every prospect of an exciting game.

Peterborough Business College.

Mr. D. J. Bannell Sawyer, the principal, has issued the "journal" of the Peterborough Business College, Hunter street. It is a neat pamphlet of twelve pages and contains an elaborate curriculum of the subjects taught in the institution, the course of study and excellent testimonials from well known business men as to Mr. Sawyer's knowledge of his business, his teaching abilities and his complete qualification for the important work in which he is engaged. The college has opened under most favorable auspices and its initial success is only an earnest of its future prosperous and useful career. We have no doubt that that the people of this district, as well as those of the Province generally will manifest a practical appreciation of the splendid opportunities so presents for securing a first-class business education.

First Class Material.

Messrs. Porter Bros. received from Chatham, on Saturday a consignment of second growth hickory and white ash of the first quality, for use in their business. By reference to their advertisement in the WEEKLY EXAMINER it will be seen that Messrs. Porter Bros. offer to repaint, free of cost, any of their vehicles which have not stood ordinary wear.

Monday, August the 10th.

An excursion will be run to Belleville on Monday next by regular train, leaving Peterborough at 7 30 a. m. Return tickets $1.00 only, good for two days. Arrangements have been made for a sail to Massassaga Park, four miles from Belleville. This picnic ground is one of the finest in Canada. Come and join this, the best excursion of the season.

The Result of Idleness.

Timothy Coughlin has, according to his own account, rendered to Police Magistrate Dumble this morning, been idle for three weeks. Like other idle people of whom we read, "some mischief still" remained for his idle hands to do; he last night got as full as a tick, and while in this condition fell into the relentless grip of the law, as personified by Constable Pidgeon, who placed him in safe quarters for the night. As Timothy has not hitherto been known as a transgressor of the rules of sobriety, he was alloyed to take his departure without contributing to the town exchequer.

The Lacrosse Tournament.

A meeting of the Lacrosse Club was held last evening for the purpose of arranging the details of the lacrosse tournament to be held here on the 10th, inst. The Shamrock and Ontario teams will be invited to stay over for the garden entertainment to be held in Murray street school grounds, and it has been decided to illuminate the grounds with the electric light. The services of the City Band have been secured, and a committee has been appointed to arrange a concert, which will include vocal and instrumental selections. No effort is being spared that will tend to make a grand success of the venture, and a capital entertainment is likely to result.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitting pair of pants that will feel as comfortable as a woollen mit, leave your order at the

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5, 1885.

The Post Office.

Mr. Ewart, a member of the Public Works Department at Ottawa, is in town to-day on business connected with the much vexed question as to which of the two proposed sites shall be chosen for the new post office. Mr. Hilliard says that the post office will be built on Mr. Sawers' lot, while Mr. Phelan is stoutly maintains that the site owned by him will be the one selected. A few more visits from various Dominion officials will probably be needed before any decision can be arrived at. It is understood that the Government engineers consider $130 per foot rather a high price for a site on Hunter street.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

"El Padre" Cigars.

Don't be Duped.

Millbrook.

The Conservative convention met Tuesday afternoon; the choice fell upon Mr. H. A. Ward, Mayor of Port Hope. After the first ballot, the vote was made unanimous.

Belleville.

The Cricket Club in Belleville has been reorganized. Mr. F. L. Fellows is Secretary.

There are nearly sixth thousand dollars of a decrease in the amount of goods entered for consumption at the port of Belleville during the month of July, 1885, compared with that month last year.

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

From the dust and the din and the hurry
I would flee like a bird if I could;
I would fly to Content, and to Nature,
In the depths of the dark, green wood.

Intense heat last week and rapid ripening of grain.

A glorious rain and high wind on Monday, followed by cooler weather.

Mr. George Taylor and Mr. W. M. Miller, of Otonabee, have secured self-binding reapers.

Loose horses and colts have disappeared from our streets—a great blessing!

Discussions respecting the reconstruction of the Senate are rife here at present.

The sentence of Riel is also a fruitful subject of talk among our village solons.

Rev. Mr. Bell, of Peterborough, preached a most eloquent and impressive sermon in the Keene Presbyterian church last Sabbath.

One of the twins of the Rev. Francis Andrews found its quiet and last resting place by the side of its departed mother last Monday afternoon.

Mrs. R. West has been seriously ill, but is recovering.

Mrs. Jas. Lang, sen., mother of John Lang, Esq., Reeve of Otonabee, was taken ill last Tuesday afternoon. Fears are entertained for her recovery.

The locomotive that jumped the track near hear last Saturday evening, plunged headlong into the huckleberry marsh, and except the rear part of it, which stuck up at an angle of forty-five degrees, buried itself it the slough; ball, driving wheels and smoke stack being invisible.

The Union Sunday School excursion and pic-nic was held last Thursday. The trip from Keene to Cameron's Point, at the foot of the lake, notwithstanding the heat of the day, was most enjoyable; the eastern end of the lake being the cleanest and most picturesque. Cameron's Point, however, is not to be compared to Idyl Wild for such an occasion; it was not even what we expected, as a large camp of Indians had pitched their tents there, and occupied the most shady and pleasant spots. Nevertheless the trip was a most delightful one for the children, and all returned home safe and sound and at a good early hour. Great credit is due to Captain Harris, of the Beaver, and his men for their unvarying kindness and attention to all under their care.

The Rebel Trials.

Riel's "Councillors" Plead Guilty of Treason-Felony.

REGINA, N. W. T., Aug. 4.—At three o'clock this afternoon twenty-two half-breed prisoners, including all Riel's council, pleaded guilty to the charge of treason-felony. By consent of counsel the sentences will not be passed until the trials are over. The court has adjourned for ten days in order to allow time to bring in witnesses in the Indian cases from Battleford and other places. Mr. Burbidge, Deputy Minister of Justice, returns east. Messrs. Robinson, Osler and Casgrain go to the Rocky Mountains.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 4.—Rev. Father Fortier, of St. Boniface, who returned from Regina to-day, brought with him the written formal retraction by Riel of all he said against the Church of Rome. Riel makes complete submission to the authorities of the Church.

Ashburnham.

Penry Williams, the painter, is dead.

Cholera has re-appeared in Paris, France.

Afghan bandits are said to be plundering Russian caravans.

The Labrador fishing prospect is better than for three years past.

It is believed that Mr. Thomas White will be sworn in as Minister of the Interior to-day.

The first annual convention of the Ontario Booksellers' Association was held in Toronto yesterday.

The Governor-General arrived in Toronto last evening. He will attend the international cricket match to-day.

The men of the 65th Battalion, Montreal, are complaining that they have not been paid off for their services in the Northwest.

Wandering Spirit, one of the Indians implicated in the Frog Lake massacre, stabbed himself and is not expected to recover.

Riel's councillors have pleaded guilty to a charge of treason-felony. The court has been adjourned for a few days to give an opportunity to bring witnesses in Indian cases.

It is expected that the Dominion elections in East Northumberland, St. John, and Cardwell will be held on the same day.

Mr. H. A. Ward, Mayor of Port Hope, has been nominated as the Conservative candidate in East Durham Dominion election.

French politicians are incensed at an article in the North German Gazette, accusing France of trying to provoke a quarrel with Germany.

Lord Salisbury says his Government have no present intention of occupying strategic positions in Afghanistan. Their efforts will be directed towards strengthening the Indian frontier. The Penjdeh negotiations, he says, are delayed by Russia's desire to acquire the fullest information on the subject.

The mortal remains of U. S. Grant were yesterday conveyed from Mount McGregor to Saratoga, thence to Albany. They will lie in state in the capitol in Albany until 10.30 a.m. to-day, when they will be conveyed to New York. Service was held in Westminster Abbey, London, in memory of the ex-President.

A Queer Way to Sell Beer.

A party who went fishing from Washington a few days ago had an amusing experience in getting some beer near the edge of Montgomery County, Maryland. They were directed to a store where beer was kept, and the merchant said he had some bottles on ice. Two bottles were called for. He produced them and said to the person ordering the beer, "come on." The merchant passed out of his store, beer in hand, followed by the wondering Washingtonian. Two or three hundred yards were traversed, and just as the puzzled angler was beginning to think he had struck a madman the merchant stopped, handed over the beer, and named his price. When the money was paid to him he said: "You see, local option prevails in Montgomery County, and I've brought you over the line into Frederick County, where there is no law against selling liquor." The couple returned to the store where the merchant produced glasses, saying there was no objection to drinking the beer on his premises, since it had not been sold within the county.

The merchant positively refused to sell any beer unless the party wanting it would accompany him across the county line. He owns a large farm as well as the store, and speaking of local option he said: "It's a good law and I won't violate it." His neighbors testify that he rigidly adhered to his rule of crossing the county line, even when his regular customers were purchasers.—Washington Star.

A Prince Albert Letter.

From a Former Resident of East Peterborough.

The Canada Presbyterian prints an interesting letter from Prince Albert, N. W. T., written by Rev. William McWilliam, who many years ago was principal of Norwood School and will be remembered by many of the older residents, especially of the eastern part of the County. He is now Presbyterian Missionary at Prince Albert, from which he writes as follows:—

Prince Albert has of late been occupying a place of no small dignity and importance. The manse, which your correspondent now occupies, by the generosity of the Foreign Mission Committee and the Assembly to his congregation, has for months been guarded with all the "pride, pomp and circumstance" which hedge around kings and royal palaces. From a lofty flagstaff in the centre of the garden floats the grand old flag, which reminds those that live under its protecting shadow that they belong to a country "unaccustomed to defeat, to submission or to shame"; and which served to point the eloquent illustrations of sermons preached in the stockade. Night and day sentries paced before the gate. From dark to daylight every passer-by had to respond to the sharp challenge, "Halt! who goes there?" and at every quarter of the hour throughout the night the inmates of the manse could hear, if they chanced to be awake, the assurance reverberating from every square of the fortification that "all was well." Two lines of pickets kept watch and ward at remoter distance, and beyond these again a line of mounted patrols kept up communication along the hills encircling the town.

* * * * *

"On several occasions our danger was very great, especially when we had sent off all our volunteers to aid the police at Carleton, we were left 'naked to our enemies.' But the Lord of Hosts was with us and the God of Jacob was our refuge. We gratefully remember, too, and recognize, the devotion and sacrifice of our friends in the East who came to our rescue, and those also who remembered us in prayer. For ourselves, I think we can say that, during these long weeks of isolation and suspense, even while we thought the troops tarry in appearing, we trusted in God and 'never despaired of our country.' We bated not a jot of heart or hope, but looked forward with confident assurance that no rebellious movement could ever prosper long in our Dominion; and we rejoice that our trust in Providence and in our friends and fellow-countrymen has not been in vain."

Referring to the assertion that the Mounted Police were prevented from co-operating with Gen. Middleton's forces by the state of feeling in Prince Albert, the writer says:—

It was pointed out even to officers of the police that their force would suffer in reputation if they took no part with the troops from the east in the attack upon Batoche; and that while a portion of the police and volunteers might be required to garrison Prince Albert, the entire force of 400 well-equipped men was by no means necessary for the effectual defence of the town. Some say that Gen. Middleton was to blame in failing to send orders for Irvine to come to his assistance. Col. Irvine will need to explain to the public satisfaction why, between the date of Fish Creek and the capture of Batoche, even if he had no orders, he did not offer and press upon Gen. Middleton the services of his superfluous men, and so get a share in the labor, the sufferings and glory of subduing the rebel stronghold.

When the troops marched in from Batoche weary and worn, with their faces and faded uniforms actually black with dust, and saw the large body of Mounted Police parade before them on sleek horses with bright scarlet jackets, and spotless white gloves and polished boots, it is no wonder if irritation was felt and expressed. When the Colonel with questionable taste expressed a regret that his men were not looking quite so well as he would like, it is little wonder that the General is credited with a stinging though somewhat strong reply. If someone has bundered, the people of Prince Albert do not think they should be made to bear the blame. They claim to be credited with the same loyalty and public spirit which have characteriled other parts of the Dominion. Immediately after the first rising they sent off on two occasions eighty men—the flower of their manhood and strength—with all the arms in the town to aid the police at Carleton, fifty miles away, and left their own town unprotected against the foe. Out of twenty-five volunteers who went to that unfortunate engagement at Duck Lake, nine were left dead on the field, and five or six were very seriously wounded; while out of sixty police, the number of killed and wounded respectively, was only three or four. When so many of our friends laid down their lives at the call of their country on the field of honor, we do not think it just that a slanderous and false accusation should be cast upon those who mourn their loss.

I may add that our own congregation has had its share of loss along with the general community. Some of those with whose faces we were familiar in our church services were among the slain at Duck Lake. Five of the nine killed were wont frequently to worship with us, though one of these did not belong to our church.

* * * * *

"I had intended to write to you of other subjects, especially of Riel himself, and the causes that led to the outbreak, but I feel I have already exceeded far the limits which your paper can afford. The journal kept by Riel during the rebellion fell into my hands. It does not contain a narrative of events; but is mainly a record of his fancied visions and his prayers. It is a strange mixture of delusion, fanaticism and earnest devotion. Though one cannot help suspecting that there was a touch of insanity about him, he manifested in his management of the Half-breeds an amount of intelligence, astuteness and ability that prove incontestably that he must be held responsible for his enormous crime.

About the half-breeds I will only say that, when not misled by agitators and irritated by oppression, they are a most peaceable and inoffensive people. Those of them who urged the others into rebellion deserve, undoubtedly, severe punishment; but about the greater number—simple, ignorant, easily beguiled, you can only say with David: "These sheep, what have they done?" Had they got the lands to which they were justly entitled, and for which they have been vainly petitioning for years—had even the commission now sitting been appointed six short months ago to investigate and settle their claims—no such rebellion could ever have occurred, and we would not now be mourning the loss of so much treasure and so many precious lives. This is the opinion of every intelligent person with whom I have conversed on the subject in the neighborhood.

Hair Dressing in the Soudan.

The Bisharees are a fine, tall race—slender, but well proportioned. They take especial care of their teeth, which are regular and of lustrous whiteness, which is in part due to their simple diet, and in part due to a root (takiwood) which they chew perpetually. Their dress is scanty but graceful. It consists of a piece of white linen wound around the waist and thrown over the shoulder. Each man carries a long, straight sword and a shield of small dimensions, made of hippopotamus or rhinoceros hide. A spear is carried in the right hand. The Bisharees, in common with the rest of the Arab tribes in the eastern Soudan, take great personal pride in their hair. A considerable portion of their lives is spent in its adornment. I doubt whether a Parisian coiffeur would care to take lessons in his metier from these children of the desert, but he would be puzzled to imitate them. The hair is jet black, coarse, wiry and abundant. It is parted in a horizontal line round the head, the parting passing close to the ears; the hair above this line is perpendicular and looks like a mop. Below this plaited and frizzed, and sticks out over the neck and shoulders like the roof of a pent-house, doubtless affording great protection to the back of the neck from the rays of the sun. The whole is stiffened with grease, and when the Bisharéen has newly performed his toilet and grease is plentiful, his sable locks assume the snowy whiteness of those of Jeames. The sun melts the grease, which drips on to the back and shoulders, forming a deposit by no means savory of the conventional spicy odors of "Araby the blest." A long skewer or hairpin transfixes this wonderful coiffeur, and serves the double purpose of a comb and a weapon used in the chase of the feræ naturæ, which abound in its immediate vicinity.—Cornhill Magazine.

Madame Mohl and the Empire.

Madame's Mohl's detestation of the Empire and all connected with it was marked by her habitual exaggeration in loving and hating. Anything that exposed the iniquities of the regime and its "suppots de Satan"—her generic term for every functionary in the Imperial service, from the prime minister down to the excise-man—anything that threw odium or ridicule on "Celui-ci," was welcome to her as flowers in May.

One Friday evening, at the Rue de Bac, M. Guizot came in, and related the following story that he had just heard:

A relation of the Duchesse de R—— had married one of those "suppots de Satan," and had further degraded herself by living under the roof with Celui-ci. The unhappy lady had become from that time forth, naturally, as one dead to her kith and kin in the noble Faubourg. But she was now ill, dying, it was believed, and it was a fit occasion for the exercise of mercy. The family therefore resolved to send her to judgment absolved at least by the Faubourg St. Germain. The duchess herself generously volunteered to take this message or pardon to her dying relative. She ordered her carriage, and said to the footman, "Aux Tuileries!" The man stared, but carried the order to the coachman; whereupon this venerable functionary, who had driven three generations of R——s, got down from his seat, and, presenting himself at the carriage window, said, "Madame la Duchesse, I cannot have the honor of conducting your grace to the Tuileries; my horses do not know the way there."

Madame Mohl clapped her hands in delight, exclaiming, "And the duchess kissed the old coachman!"

"No," said M. Guizot, "but she got out of her carriage, and sent for a cab."

Madame Mohl lived on this story for a week, and so did her friends.

"The present state of things makes me so sick," she writes to Madame Scherer, apropos of the Empire, "that I can hardly digest my victuals. I should not eat at all if I thought much about it, so I think of something else, and read travels in South America."—Kathleen O'Meara, in April Atlantic.

A Ribnitz Inn.

On a large, deserted square a rambling inn threw open its hospitable doors and welcomed us as if we were the one party in the world the host had been looking for since the inn was opened. The storm was not so severe but we could straggle around the town in the evening and explore the dimly lighted streets. The sultry air, scarcely cooled by the rain, made the interior oppressive, so we wandered around as well as we could and then sought our quarters. We found that the rooms had been prepared for us with careful attention. Everything was neat and fresh and comfortable. In about five minutes after retiring to our respective chambers we all appeared in the hallway again, in various stages of undress, clamoring for the servant. A blushing chambermaid soon appeared, and was shown in turn the three couches, each with a mountainous feather-bed coverlet incased in a sack of white linen. Explanations and expostulations were of no avail. She could not understand the cause of our complaint, but insisted on the purity of the home-spun linen and the softness and lightness of the feather-bed coverlet. At last the whole household was aroused, and after great difficulty the proprietor was made to conceive the fact that we could not sleep that sultry August night under a feather-bed which would have suffocated us in midwinter. After earnest declarations that all Ribnitz people slept under one feather-bed in summer and under two in winter, he was obliged to confess that there had never been a call for upper sheets and blankets in his house, and he had none. We, as a last resort, emptied the feather-bed out of its sack and used this as a sheet. But for the perambulating watchman, who made night noisy with their unintelligible hourly cries, we would have slept soundly.—Harper's Magazine.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5, 1885.

MR. McLEOD.

We personally have never had the slightest objection to Mr. McLeod publicly disseminating his opinions, however false, humbugging and stupid they may be. We care not whether he supports the orange or green or whether his convictions are orthodox or infidel, for his influence is imperceptible in any direction.

What we distinctly object to and what we squarely charge against Mr. McLeod is the imputation by him against us, both publicly and privately, of motives which are entirely foreign to us, and without even the most flimsy foundation, and the assertion made by him against us of acts which we never committed and which Mr. McLeod knows we never committed, yet which he with brazen effrontery and ingratitude flings at us on every occasion, for the purpose of raising a false sympathy in his favor and throwing a false glamour around his cause.

We also object to Mr. McLeod attempting to drag the Reform party into every mud puddle he wishes to wade into, in his search for treasure, and we object to his assumption of the noble doctrines of Reform and good government, upon the reputation of which he wishes to huckster his wares.

His falsehood and trickery when directed towards other objects than ourselves, we, whilst regretting, cannot prevent, but when he directs these—his only—weapons against us from the covert of a fence-corner, we neither now nor hereafter intend to stand still whilst he explodes them.

On the present occasion, Mr. McLeod publicly asserted that in refusing to print a clipping which he offered us, we said "it would injure the Reform party." In accepting or rejecting clippings, we are always guided by our own discretion and look both to the advantage and interest of our readers. If we accepted all clippings handed to us, our paper would not have either its present position or reputation.

We ourselves openly denied the assertino of Mr. McLeod. We produced a letter of Mr. J. B. McWilliams, who was present when we rejected the article, which also clearly and irrefutably denied it. We also produced a letter of Mr. F. J. Jameson, who was also present, which also brands his assertion as a falsehood. We interviewed Mr. Cumming, who was also present, and he, in the presence of a third party, also squarely denied it, and which we can prove, if necessary, by the latter gentleman.

To-day we produce a letter over the signature of Mr. Cumming, which also directly contradicts Mr. McLeod:

Mr. J. R. Stratton,

DEAR SIR,—I did not hear you say to Mr. McLeod, when refusing to insert his clipping, that it would injure the Reform party.

WM. CUMMING.

We at the same time produced a letter from Mr. John Moloney, which branded Mr. McLeod as a liar, on account of another false and slanderous charge made against us, and now, in order to heap Pelion on Ossa—in order to pile still higher the mass of falsehood, lying at his door, he denies that either Mr. McWilliams or Mr. Jameson were present at the interview.

We now soberly ask ourselves whether Mr. McLeod would not, if it suited his purposes, deny that Mr. McLeod exists—that Mr. McLeod has a personal identity; or is it possible that Mr. McLeod is a mere puppet of his imagination—a creature without truth, form or semblance of being.

If we were to try to propitiate every rascally cur that barks at our heels, our time would be fully occupied, both to our distaste and discredit, and accordingly, whilst we allow the "common fry of curs" to snap and snarl, we feel compelled now and again to brand one which, owing to our very disregard and contempt, has become too conspicuous and too obnoxious, so that other wayfarers may beware of the disagreeable persecution.

For some time Mr. McLeod has been following at our heels, picking the ends of sentences dropped by us, as if they were choice morsels, and licking and twisting them until they have become coated with his own slimy individuality, and then holding them up privately as the only first and original product of ourselves. We have heretofore quietly and contemptuously borne this abominable persecution, as we considered that those persons who were on speaking of his wild and silly hallucinations and misgivings on religious, political and other subjects. But when Mr. McLeod steps into print, wrapped up in his wiles and falsehoods, we now for the first time, and we hope for the last time, tear off the mantle, brand him as he deserves, and leave him standing a laughing stock to the thoughtless, but a pitiable object to his well-wishers.

We do not think it necessary to defend Mr. J. B. McWilliams from the insinuations of Mr. McLeod, as to his Orange leanings. The former gentleman's record is open. For fifteen years he has stood at the head of the Orange order in this county, and to-day stands in the same position. Who attacks him? A man whose Protestant principles have been so lately bought that the gloss has not yet worn off—a man who, to sell his silly pamphlets in a hotel in this county, to the very 'Romanists' whom he so bitterly assails, rapturously drank the health of a high Roman Catholic in this county, and then palmed off his old stock on the unsuspecting crowd.

When a man of the character of Mr. McLeod and of his principles, and for his petty political purposes, pretends, or assumes to pretend, to champion the grand doctrines of Protestantism, we say distinctly that he has neither the courage, learning, experience nor ability to defend Protestantism, or any other "ism" for that matter, except, perhaps, humbuggism.

We do not bear Mr. McLeod, personally, any ill-will, and we sincerely hope that both Mr. McLeod and others will in future attend to their own business and not place us under the necessity of publicly defending ourselves at their sorrow and expense. Neither he nor any other person is to be allowed to maliciously distort our public position as a journalist, imagining that their very insignificance will be their protection.

Northwest News Notes.

WINNIPEG, August 3.—A Battleford despatch says the Winnipeg Light Infantry arrived on Saturday evening, with twenty-three Indian prisoners. The Hon. Mr. Norquay has gone to Grand Rapids to meet them.

A terrible tailstorm occurred here yesterday and it is feared some damage to crops has resulted.

Major Crozier is going north from Regina with a posse of police to prevent further disturbance.

Riel's lawyers purpose appealing to the Manitoba Court and then to the Privy Council. Riel attended mass yesterday, and wanted to go to confession, but will not be allowed until he has made public recantation of "Protestantism."

Col. McLeod has arrived at Regina and is ready to begin hearing cases.

The Scandal Settled.

Sir Chas. Dilke's Check Accepted for a Round Amount.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The scandal involving Sir Charles Dilke has been settled, so far as the courts and the English press are concerned. The settlement was completed yesterday by the cashing of Sir Charles' check for $125,000 in favor of Mr. Crawford, the aggrieved husband. This puts it out of the power of the papers to mention the right honorable gentleman's name in connection with the subject without incurring heavy penalties for libel, and British moral sense is appeased, because the sinner, although guilty of the awful crime of being found out, has paid handsomely for suppressing the truth, and thus shielding the sacred circle of society.

To Collectors of Customs.

An Important Circular from the Department at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 1.—The Customs Department has issued the following circular: Invoices of goods purchased in bond in the United States are required to be accompanied by a certificate from the collector of customs at the port of export, certifying that the document is a correct extract from the invoice on file at his port, and giving the date of import and export marks and invoice value, and to such value there should be added the cost of the freight transhipment and all other expenses and charges connected therewith together with the probable profit of the United States importer, and in cases where invoices are not accompanied by such certificate, the value on which duty is to be collected shall be the value in the open market at the time of shipment, and in all cases where doubts exist as to such value the usual course prescribed by the appraisement section of the customs act shall be taken and applied to the case.

A Bitter Attack.

The Tory papers have made a pretty unanimous and bitter attack upon Mr. W. T. R. Preston, the nominee of the Liberal Association for East Durham. It is hardly to be expected that the Secretary of the Reform Association, and as such one of the most active party men in the province, could escape abuse at such a juncture, but the libels of an unfriendly press will not in the slightest affect his campaign. We are told that he is characterless and conscienceless, intemperate in conduct, without a generous sentiment, a dummy, a man unfit to succeed Col. Williams in the representation of the constituency. He is, however, just as respectable and honorable and generous, and fully as able to discuss the issues of the day, as most of his assailants. Mr. T. White is especially offended at his ambition to sit in Parliament. But Mr. White was not always a great man and did not always fatten on public pap. He made a modest beginning. Mr. Preston may be "certain of defeat," and he may not; if he is on the losing side in this election he will know how to appreciate Mr. White's feelings under similar circumstances, and he will do well to profit by the persistent and try-try-try-again policy of the same distinguished gentleman. Mr. White's bitterness is easily accounted for. Mr. Preston had the audacity to pass on several occasions between the wind and his nobility, to face him at election meetings, to discount his opinions and neutralize his labours, hence he has not the "instincts of a gentleman or the qualifications required in even the humblest member of the Legislature." It would be simply awful that such a plebian should sniff the air of the House of Commons while Mr. White airs himself within it. A Grit, no matter how talented, is a miserable fellow and unfit for association with the kid-glove party; a horse thief, if a Tory, is infinitely more preferable."—Montreal Times.

American vs. Canadian Cheese.

The Canadian Article takes the Lead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—A meeting of the Cheese Committee of the Produce Exchange was held this week in the Complaint Committee room to discuss "American vs. Canadian cheese, their keeping qualities, etc."

Mr. S. S. Marples, at the request of the chairman, made a statement embodying the opinions which, as the result of a recent visit to England, he had been led to form regarding the feasibility of so improving the fall made cheese of New York State as to give it an equal chance with the Canadian article in the English market. He found that wherever September cheese was shipped from Canada and New York, without the specification of the factory at which it was made, the former invariably had the preference. This being so, he would suggest the advisability of the Exchange addressing the factorymen of this State, showing how the discrimination alluded to prejudiced the sale of their products, and inquiring whether anything could be done to improve its keeping qualities. Canada was unquestionably increasing its dairy products, and this must, in default of some such special effort, take away much of the New York trade. The speaker was under the impression that the New York farmer cures his cheese so as to be at its best forty-five days from the date of its birth, and not at ninety, as the Canadian farmer does. New York cheese is shipped too green, and does not stand the voyage as well as the rival product; and he believed that the farmers might, if their attention was called to the matter, cure their fall cheese more slowly, and put in more salt, or adopt other measures to make it keep better. At all events, he judged it important that they should be apprised of the undoubted preference which existed in England for Canadian cheese.

Mr. John H. Hodson, while fully admitting the prejudice in favor of Canadian cheese, thought climatic influences entered somewhat into the question. He also pointed out that Canada had given special attention to the industry, and that the expert appointed by the Dominion Government for that purpose had been of great assistance in enabling the farmer to improve the quality of his cheese.

Mr. McAdams suggested as reasons why New York cheese was thought less desirable than Canadian, (1) the failure of the makers to expel sufficient moisture; (2) the endeavor to make skims appear as good as cream cheese by leaving some moisture in it; (3) too rapid curing; (4) too much acid and too little salt in "draining"; (5) undue reduction of cheese-makers' wages. He supported a proposal to issue a circular to the farmers.

Mr. C. M. Vail, President of the Produce Exchange, enforced the last speaker's concluding remarks regarding the short-sighted manner in which, for the sake of perhaps $5 a month, a factory would part with a valuable cheese-maker. He held that while the finest State cheese is equal to the finest Canadian, the average is somewhat inferior.

Life at Cannes.

All the world drives about in the afternoon—the carriage either following the winding coast roads to east or west or climbing the surrounding hills by a succession of sweeps and zigzags, each of them opening up fresh glimpses of the scenery—pulling up in some rugged gorge or some quiet sylvan valley. Thence you may scramble up the steep banks by narrow foot-tracks, winding through the thickets of fragrant scrub that grows breast high, or through the thick fir woods that clothe the sides of the rooky dells, with the streamlets murmuring somewhere out of sight in the bottom, and here and there coming out into light and evidence, where they fall in tiny sheets of silver over the faces of the lichen-covered cliffs. Then, emerging from the thickets of fir, where the dwarfed trees have begun to struggle and die down, you come on some brownhill-shoulder, which shows you a broad panorama of the rolling ranges of hill and dale that sink into shadowy plains in the middle distance before they rise into the blue-black mountains skirting the northern horizon. But of all the objects that fill the foregrounds of the views, Cannes itself is the most striking and original. You see fine scenery elsewhere—you may see loose agglomerations of handsome houses in their gardens—but nowhere on this side of the Atlantic, nor, indeed, as we believe, on the other, do you see such a collection of enormous hotels monopolizing the most commanding situations. They certainly do not run to the proportions of the monster establishments in Newport or Saratoga, yet the biggest are big enough in all conscience, and there are many more of them. There are over sixty of them now—there were only two small posting-houses when Lord Brougham discovered Cannes — of which a third or so are said to be first rate; all have sprung up in the last five-and-twenty years, and all are said to be fairly prosperous.—Blackwood's Magazine.

CHAPTER V.

BY LAW, NOT BY LOVE.

Proud and happy as I felt when seated side by side with Pauline in the railway carriage which was taking us to the north, fortunate as I told myself I was to have won such a fair bride; great as my love was for the sweet girl who had just vowed herself mine forever, Generi's extraordinary stipulation kept recurring to my mind—the man who marries Pauline March must be content to take her as she is; to wish to know nothing of her past.

Not for one minute did I think such a contract could be enforced. As soon as I had succeeded in making Pauline love me, she would surely wish to tell me all her history—there would be no need to ask for it—the confidence would then be given as a matter of course. When she learned the secret of love, all other secrets would cease between us.

My wife looked very beautiful as she sat with her head leaning against the dark cloth of the carriage. Her clear-cut, refined features showed in that position advantageously. Her face, as usual, was pale and calm; her eyes were cast down. A woman to be indeed proud of; to worship, to cherish, and—how sweet it seemed to whisper the word to myself—my wife!

Yet I suspect none would have taken us for a newly married couple. At any rate, there were no nudgings and sly glances among our fellow-passengers. The ceremony had been so hurried on that no attempt had been made to invest Pauline with the usual bridal accessories. Her dress, although becoming and fashionable, was the one in which I had seen her several times. Neither of us had any brand new belongings to stamp us as being bound for a honeymoon; so the only notice we attracted was the notice which was due my wife's great and uncommon beauty.

The carriage was nearly full when we started from London, and as the strangeness of our new relations prevented our conversing in an ordinary way, by mutual consent we were all but silent; a few soft words in Italian were all I could trust myself to speak until we were alone.

At the first important station, the first place at which the train stopped for any time worth mentioning, I exercised a little diplomatic bribery, and, changing our carriage, we were installed in a compartment the windows of which bore the magic word "engaged." Pauline and I were alone. I took her hand in mine.

"My wife!" I said passionately, "mine, only mine, forever!"

Her hand lay listless and unresisting in my own. I pressed my lips to her cheek. She shrank not from my kiss, neither did she return it—she simply suffered it.

"Pauline!" I whispered, "say once, 'Gilbert, my husband.'"

She repeated the words like a child learning a new lesson. My heart sank as her motionless accents fell on my ears. I had a hard task before me!

I could not blame her. Why should she love me yet? Me, whose Christian name, I think, she heard yesterday for the first time? Better, far better, indifference than simulated love. She had become my wife simply because her uncle wished it. I could at least comfort myself by thinking the marriage had not been forced upon her; also that, so far as I could see, she entertained no dislike to me. I did not for one moment despair. I must now woo her humbly and reverently, as every man should woo his love. Certainly, as her husband I did not stand in a worse position than when I was her fellow-lodger and old Teresa was following my every movement with her black suspicious eyes.

I would win her, but until I could claim the rights which love would give, I resolved to take none of those with which the law had invested me. None save this, and this only once.

"Pauline," I said, "will you kiss me? Only once I ask it. It will make me happier; but if you would rather wait until we are better acquainted, I shall not complain."

She leaned forward and kissed my forehead. Her young lips were red and warm, but they chilled me—in that kiss there was not a suspicion of the passion which was thrilling me.

I drew my hand from hers, and, still sitting beside her, began to do my best to make myself agreeable to the woman I loved. If I felt distressed and somewhat disappointed, I concealed it and strove to talk pleasantly and naturally, tried to ascertain what manner of woman I had married—to get at her likes and dislikes—to study her disposition—to determine her tastes—learn her wishes—read her thoughts and eventually to make her regard me as one who would spend his life in rendering her happy.

When was it the idea first struck me, the horrible idea that even the peculiarity and novelty of the situation could not altogether account for Pauline's apathy and lack of sensation—that shyness alone could not be entirely responsible for the difficulty I experienced in making her talk to me, even in inducing her to answer my question? I made every excuse for her. She was tired; she was upset; she could think of nothing else save the rash and sudden step taken to-day—more rash for her than for me—as I, at least, knew that I loved her. At last I, too, sank into silence, and hours went by, whilst the bride and bridegroom sat side by side without exchanging a word, much less a caress. It was a strange situation—a strange journey!

And on and on the train rushed northward—on and on until the dusk began to creep over the flying country; and I sat and looked at the listless but beautiful girl at my side, and wondered what our future life would be; but I did not despair, although the rattle of the train as it whirred along seemed to resolve itself into a dreamy rhythm, and reiterated without ceasing old Teresa's sullen words, "She is not for love or marriage—not for love or marriage."

Darker and darker it grew outside, and as the carriage light fell on the pure, white face of the girl beside me; as I watched its never changing expression; its beautiful but never varying pallor, a strange fear came over me—a fear lest she was wrapped in an armor of ice which no love would ever thaw. Then tired, weary and almost disheartened I sank into a kind of sleep. The last thing I could remember before my eyes closed was that, in spite of my resolution, I took that white, well-shaped, unresisting hand in my own, and slept still holding it.

Sleep! Yes, it was sleep, if sleep means anything but rest and peace. Never since the night I heard it had that woman's stifled moaning come back to me so clearly; never had my dreams so nearly approached the reality of the terror which the blind man had felt years ago. Right thankful I was when the haunting cry rose shriller and shriller, and, at last, culminated by resolving itself into the shrieking whistle, which told me we were near to Edinburgh. I loosed my wife's hand and recalled my senses. That dream must have been a vivid one, for it left me with the beads of perspiration clammy on my brow.

Tethered.

I.

An open lake with room for all the sky;
Northward wide slopes and then the tall blue chain;
To east the depths of pines and, closer by,
Willows that met the ripples, warping oaks,
Cedars, dense elms that hold the wood-doves' cry;
And stretching to the sun, a boundless plain.

On the free lake, on the free river,
The swans drift by at rest,
Breast the wind's waves in strong endeavor,
Break the clear calm with smooth low strokes;
To North, to South, to East, to West,
Swans on lake and river.

II.

A careful garden where the ivy spreads,
Lending a rustic touch to shadowing walls;
And, in the centre space, the patterned beds,
Catching the noonday sun, bloom red and gold;
And pollard limes send sweetness o'er our heads;
And there's green lawn, save where their shadow falls.

Lilacs blow first, then carpet posies,
Crisp asters find their turn;
Proof of each season it incloses,
(Even though sparrows are too bold),
The garden with the fountain urn,
With the shapely posies.

III.

Swans on the river, on the lake's blue deep;
In the walled garden with the lines arow
A swan sits in a corner, half asleep,
A swan that wears a chain upon his limb,
Measured the length that he may come and go;
And he can reach the urn and has his keep.

On the free lake, on the free river,
The swans go who knows where;
Guest of the garden, guest forever,
Room in the fountain's bath for him,
The chain's full length to take the air,
Swan enchained forever.

One showed a life's long secret, pitying thus,
"Poor swan! 'tis like a tethered soul of us."

—Good Words.

A Child in the Storm.

"Won't you come home now, father, please?" she said. Her voice was low and childish, and the sweet, upturned face was pale and quivering with some hardly suppressed emotion—but the man toward whom the appeal and agony were directed took little notice of either.

"Why do you bother me?" he said, impatiently, "Go home. I'll come when I'm ready," and regaining with an effort his uncertain balance, he left her.

The girl looked after him wistfully, then, as his form was lost to her view in the crowded room, with a deep despairing sigh she turned and left the place. Outside the electric lights streamed full upon her slender figure as she hesitated a moment before descending the step. The night was cold and stormy. An icy sleet was falling, driven in every direction by the capricious and fitful wind gusts, and the few pedestrians who were abroad hurried on their way anxious to gain shelter. The girl alone appeared unconscious of the discomforts of the weather.

"So late," she murmured. "Oh! I cannot go home without him," and now she turned swiftly and retraced her steps. She paused not a moment on the threshold; evidently she feared her own resolution. The doors yielded instantly to her touch, and once more she looked over the scene whose light and warmth and comfort were as little to her as the wind and rain outside. Her searching glance soon found out her father; for the moment he was standing alone, and his daughter felt that she had one more chance. Rapidly she gained his side.

"Father, dear father," she began, speaking low but passionately, "I cannot leave you here. I cannot face mamma without you; she has waited so many nights for your home-coming, and the hours are so weary without you. Oh, father," the child went on, gathering up all her energies as she saw that her listener was half heeding her words, "break away from this wretched place, come back to your home and mamma and me; we love you so dearly we cannot live without you, and oh! it is all so different now from what it used to be." The childish voice was breaking. "Such a little time ago we were all so happy." Here a sob almost choked her. She slipped her clinging fingers into the unresenting hand of the man who staggered at her side. "Come back to us, father; come home with me now," and the tears, no longer within her power to restrain, coursed down her pale cheeks as she lifted her face to him, holding his gaze with her wistful, pleading eyes.

The man's features worked convulsively; he looked about him once half desperately; then some better feeling swept over him, and, straightening himself up, he said brokenly, "I will go with you, Jennie," and clasping close the hand of his little daughter, as if that frail guide were his chief support, the two together went out from the light and glare and dazzle of the roller skating rink forever.

Record of Interments.

There were twelve interments in Little Lake Cemetery during the month of July. Of these ten were from the town and the remainder from the country.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meteorological office:—South-west to west winds, fresh, but strong during the day; clearing, warm weather.

Excursion to Belleville.

Arrangements have been made for an excursion by train to Belleville on Monday next. Tickets $1.00, good for two days. Train leaves Peterborough at 7.30 a. m., and parties returning can either reach town at 8 o'clock the same day or wait over until Tuesday as they prefer. Special rates for meals, etc., have been secured at the principal hotels. Remember the date, Monday next.

A Fractured Arm.

James Crowley, a boarder at the C. P. R. Hotel, in going upstairs on Monday night, fell and injured his arm. He did not think anything of it at the time, but it became so painful yesterday, that Dr. Kincaid was called in, when it was discovered that the arm was broken. The fracture was set, and Crowley is now doing as well as could fairly be expected.

A Successful Entertainment.

Notwithstanding the somewhat unpropitious weather the garden entertainment held last evening in the grounds of T. Bradburn, Esq., under the auspices of the George Street Methodist Church, was a pronounced success. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen, and the excellent selections of music rendered by the Fire Brigade Band, which had been engaged for the occasion, made promenading in the beautiful grounds very pleasant. Refreshments, fruits, lemonade and ice cream were liberally dispensed by the ladies of the church, and a handsome sum was realised from the proceeds of the party.

Deaf and Dumb Institute.

We have received from Mr. R. Matheson, superintendent of the Ontario Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Belleville, an intimation that visitors to the city will be welcomed to the institution. There are many deaf and dumb children whose parents are not aware of the liberal provision made by the Province for such afflicted ones. Every deaf and dumb child in Ontario, of suitable age and capacity, may have instruction and training in intellectual culture and in some useful occupation, by attending the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Belleville. There were 240 pupils in attendance last session, but as a number completed their education and left in June, there will be room for all for whom admission is desired when the Institution re-opens in September.

Still More From the Storm.

The effects of Monday's storm are still continuing to crop up into notice, and the fresh instances heard of may, to a certain extent, be taken as types of similar ravages in the vicinity. Mr. Thos. Hooper, dairyman, states that in some parts of Otonabee the storm laid flat many promising fields of oats. On the Z. Burnham farm a thrifty orchard was greatly damaged; over twenty trees are blown completely over and most of the trees at the root are surrounded by holes, made by the tree being twisted around and around in different directions by the force of the wind. The ground is of course covered with fruit, and abundance of "windfalls" may be expected to be offered on the market. In other respects the rain was most welcome. The pastures were becoming very bare and brown and stock was becoming very badly off from lack of pasturage. But the rain will bring it on again and also fill the brooks and ponds.

Fatal Runaway Accident.

A Bethany Farmer Thrown from His Waggon and Killed Instantly.

A sad runaway accident occurred last evening near Bethany, which resulted in the death of Mr. R. J. Preston, a well-known and universally respected farmer, who resided on a farm about three miles west of that village. From what can at present be learned regarding the accident, it appears that Mr. Preston was working with a team and waggon on his own farm, and for some reason had occasion to step on the tongue of the waggon. The horses, from some unknown cause, suddenly took fright and shied off, violently hurling the unfortunate farmer beneath the wheels of the waggon, which inflicted such severe injuries on him that he died almost instantly. Mr. Preston is well-known in town, and has many connections here, and his untimely fate will be universally lamented.

Ladies!

For a fine style of a Langtry Bang, Parisian Bang, Water Wave, etc., send to A. Dorenwend, Toronto, the leader in fashion of hair goods. See advertisement in this paper.

Artistic Instruction.

The attention of those interested, is called to the card of Miss Butcher, which appears in this issue. This lady has made the subject a careful study, and is well qualified to successfully impart the instruction she announces to do.

Lacrosse.

On the thirteenth of August an excursion will arrive in town from Perth, and an invitation has been extended and accepted for a lacrosse match between the Perth club and the second twelve of the Peterboroughs.

County Flowers.

Mr. H. Nesbitt, governor of the county jail, is a most successful cultivator of flowers. The old beds on the Court House terrace are filled with a splendid collection of plants in full and beautiful bloom.

Health of the District.

The following is the percentage of diseases most prevalent in the Midland District for the week:—Consumption, 13.3; anæmia, 10.9; neuralgia, 9.1; goitre, 7.5; heart disease, 7.3; rheumatism, 5.9.

Root and Branch.

Messrs. Nesbitt and Ray are exercising the "hard labor" squad of their family in tearing up root and branch, the suckers of the silver poplars that so greatly disfigure the southeastern corner of the Court House Park.

Why Didn't They Come?

The Lindsay Base Ball Club, who were to have played a championship match with the Peterboroughs this afternoon at Riverside Park, have failed to put in an appearance, and have not sent any explanation of their failure to do so. What is the matter? Are they afraid?

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	83°	29.17°
1 o'clock	67°	29.21°
3 o'clock	63°	29.25°

Steps in the Right Direction.

Mr. J. E. Belcher, county engineer, has been making a survey of the eastern entrance of the Court House Park with a view of putting down the new steps that are to replace the score-year-old rotting oak steps that exist there at present. This is all the more necessary, as many persons are in the habit of making the park, since its opening, a pleasant "short cut" to and from their residences.

The Military Ball.

We understand that the committee in charge of the military ball, which takes place to-morrow night, at the Lansdowne rink, have made ample and elegant preparations for its success. Those wishing to appear in military dress can obtain the uniform at the rink in the evening. The gallery will be open to spectators for 25 cents admission. It is the desire of the committee that the ball be opened in full military dress. Supper served in the rink. Doors open at eight o'clock; 57th Battalion band and orchestra will be in attendance.

It's So.

No home complete or happy without a Light Running New Williams or Domestic Sewing Machine. More of the above machines selling in Canada to-day than any other machine made. Reasons why:—Because they have reached the top of the tree, and are noiseless, light running, and have more improvements than any other machine made. Don't fail to try them before buying, as our prices are lower than other dealers are asking for inferior machines. D. SMART, Bell Organ Office.

Salvationists Rotten-Egged.

A gentleman from Belleville, who was in town this morning, informs our reporter that last night the Belleville detachment of the Salvation Army got a warm reception—received an ovation, highly impregnated with sulphuretted hydrogen—in fact they were rotten-egged. A quacksalver had paid a license for the use of the Market Square, to vaunt the virtues of some great healing remedy. When he began his oration the Salvations struck up their full band, and the quacksalver received his quietus, sadly announcing that the free show that he was to delight the populace with had to be foregone. The populace being thus cheated of their cheap fun vented their disappointment upon the Salvationists in the emphatic form of rotten eggs.

The Cemetery Extension.

A Plot of About Six Acres to be Added to the Present Burying Ground.

The rapid growth of Peterborough and corresponding increase in the number of deaths during late years has long ago rendered an extension of the cemetery necessary. Negotiations have accordingly been in progress, for some time past, between the Cemetery company and John Burnham, Esq., with a view to the purchase of a portion of that gentleman's property lying contiguous to the cemetery, for the purpose of extending its limits. These negotiations have now been brought to a successful issue, and about six acres of land, lying to the west of the cemetery, bounded on the north by Crescent street and on the south by Ware street, have been transferred to the Company. The road known as Haggart street runs between the cemetery and the recently acquired addition, but it will be now closed as far south as Ware street. This addition to the cemetery will obviate the difficulty that has of late been experienced in obtaining suitable burial plots, and when the new portion of the cemetery has been laid out in keeping with the rest of the old will add to its general beauty.

Personal.

Mr. Geo. Addison, of Toronto, who has been spending the last ten days in town with friends, returned to the city this morning.

Mr. W. D. Hughes, Travelling Passenger Agent, and Mr. W. R. Callaway, District Passenger Agent, of the C.P.R., are in town to-day.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins, Assistant General Traffic Manager of the Midland Division of the G. T. R., Mr. Harry Youmans, formerly of Peterborough, Manager of Burdock Blood Bitters, Toronto, and Mrs. James McCrea left to-day for Sturgeon Point, where they will spend a two weeks holiday.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable" or "El Padre" brands of cigars, which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w-1y

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Programme of Proposed Civic Entertainments.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—It is rumored that our city fathers intend to raise a crop of fall wheat on Brock street of the Delhi variety. In confirmation of said rumor, the municipal plough entered yesterday morning and made several rounds that would take a prize at an agricultural ploughing match. About the only things not torn up by the official heroes were the telegraph poles. It has leaked out that when the crop is ripe next season, Mr. Cahill and Mr. Menzies are engaged in advance to cradle it, Messrs. Kelly and McNaughton will do the raking and binding, Messrs. Kendry and Rutherford will put up the stooks, and Messrs. Douglas and Davidson will pick out the thistles. It is presumed that the (then) Mayor will superintend the job, and that our sprightly little medical health officer will kindly disinfect the harvesters before their return to the Council Chamber. The proceeds of the crop are to be devoted to the filling in of Spaulding's Bay.

I believe it is also in contemplation by the City Fathers to hold a "Harvest Home Festival" on the Riverside Park, Mr. Yelland to furnish the music—with anvil accompaniments. Dancing and speeches will be the leading features of the evening. Mr. Green will be floor manager.

Several members of the Council are expected to relate their municipal experiences; Mr. Kelly, through the medium of a magic lantern, will show the appearance of the town when houses are numbered. Mr. Menzies, true to his instinct for books, will recite some charming paragraphs from Mark Twain; John McNaughton will tell in his own inimitable style the adventures and vicissitudes of a man who has pushed his way from the "last" to the first of society, while the "weight and measure" of this grand affair will be climaxed by an eloquent valedictory from that amiable and affable gentleman, Mr. Thos. Cahill. See bills and posters which will shortly appear.

The Illustrious Dead.

The Remains of Gen. Grant Borne to New York.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Over 77,000 persons viewed Gen. Grant's remains here. The funeral train left for New York at 7 p. m. It is expected that ninety members of the Assembly will participate in the funeral at New York. The trustees of the Capitol adopted a resolution that a memorial slab be sunk in the pavement of the Vestibule of the Capitol, suitably inscribed, in commemoration of the lying in state of the remains of Gen. Grant.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—The train bearing the remains of Gen. Grant reached the Central depot in this city at 5 p. m. The progress from Albany to New York was viewed by many thousands of people. Along the line the house tops were crowded with people, and at each stopping place thousands had assembled to pay their last tribute to the illustrious dead. Many of them stood out doors in the pouring rain for a long time to witness the passage of the train to its destination.

The funeral train was met at the depot by an immense crowd of people. The coffin was carried by the U. S. Grant Post of the G. A. R., who had kept vigil over their dead comrade at Mount McGregor. The different military companies and the regulars whom the Government had sent as an escort and guard of honor marched behind. General Hancock marshalled the procession. The three sons of the dead hero left the depot quietly. All others who came with the train followed the remains out in double file. The Citizens' Committee was led by ex-Mayor Cooper, ex-Governor Cornell, and ex-Mayor Edson and Jackson S. Shultz walking. Next followed the regulars, behind them Governor Hill, and Gen. Farnsworth and his glittering staff, and in their turn Committees of the House and Senate at Albany, 15 and 10 in numbers respectively. The streets along the line of march was heavily draped with mourning, every stoop and railing that might furnish a point of observation for sightseers was occupied.

EVERY HAT WAS OFF

and the huge crowd bowed their heads and were silent. As the procession passed nothing could be heard but the rumbling of heavy guns and roll of muffled drums. More than an hour was occupied in reaching the city hall. When the right entered the park the left was still a mile away. The people lowered their bared heads as the procession passed into the city hall. There beneath the catafalque which had already been erected, the men who bore the coffin laid down their burden. Col. Fred. Grant, U. S. Grant, Jr., and Jesse Grant, dressed in black, followed the body into the hall. Then came the committee of one hundred representing the city of New York, Legislative Committee, the members of the Common Council of Albany, and others. When these had passed around the catafalque they left the building. The coffin was taken into a private room where it was opened and the body and it was a few minutes after nine o'clock when the coffin, with the lid removed, was again placed on the catafalque and the iron gates were swung open and the public allowed to enter.

PREPARED FOR PUBLIC VIEW,

A long line of people shut in by files of policemen passed into the portico, and after viewing the remains passed out by the rear door of the hall. Everything had been so carefully arranged that there was no confusion and little crowding. There were all sorts of people in the line. Gen. Hancock to the city authorities early in the evening. Hereafter the police of the city are responsible for its keeping. The coffin will be kept open until 1 a. m. to-morrow, Friday and Saturday. On the last named morning the coffin will be finally closed.

FORMALLY DELIVERED THE BODY

Canadian Products in England.

The Prince of Wales Views Them at Preston.

The royal agricultural show at Preston, in Lancashire, is one of the greatest annual events of the kind in Great Britain. The Prince of Wales attended the show on July 17th and paid a visit to the Canadian department, as to which the Preston Guardian says in its issue of the 18th: "Before leaving the grounds the Prince paid a visit to the pavillion of the Canadian Government. This proved one of the most attractive resorts of the show. The stand shows specimens of grain, roots, and general agricultural produce of Manitoba and other provinces of the Dominion of Canada. The exhibits comprise about 52 varieties of grain in the ear, specimens of minerals, including a very fine sample of phosphate of lime, an article which has lately found employment for a great number of people in the Dominion, and of which some seventy thousand tons were exported to the United Kingdom for the manufacture of artificial manures last year. Specimens of timber of a very fine quality are shown, and also a variety of other articles. The object of the exhibition is to make the resources of the Dominion better known, a movement in which the Prince evinces a great interest. His Royal Highness, who spent some time in the pavilion, and to whom the exhibits were briefly explained by Mr. John Dyke, Canadian Government Agent of Liverpool, expressed his satisfaction with the exhibition, and was, at his own request, supplied with copies of the pamphlets issued by the Canadian Government in seventeen different languages. His Royal Highness said that he was pleased that the Canadian Government were putting forth such efforts to make known the nature of their country throughout Europe, and was gratified to learn that those efforts were being attended with success. He also made enquiries as to the German settlers in the Northwest, conversing with Mr. Dyke in German, and was pleased to hear of the progress made in the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is expected to be opened shortly. His Royal Highness also asked for information as to the success of the Scotch crofters and the emigrants from the east end of London. Among the pamphlets given to the Prince was an interesting work on the cattle quarantine system of Canada, just now of great interest, on the opening page of which it is stated that "Canada is destined to become one of the most important cattle-raising countries in the world." The grazing lands are ample and rich, fodder is comparatively cheap, labor is low, and the means of carriage are unsurpassed for comfort, speed, and moderate rates. The export of cattle and sheep to Great Britain has made remarkable advances. Since 1874, when the first shipment of 455 head was made, the increase of business has been very rapid and marked, the quality of the stock has improved most materially, and the prices realised have met the best expectations of the dealers engaged in the traffic. The Prince re-entered his carriage exactly at one o'clock, and driving to the main entrance immediately left the show ground, followed by a cheering crowd.

A Rainbow in a Window Pane.

In Pendleton county, Kentucky, about half-way between Demossville and Knoxville, lives a very worthy old gentleman by the name of Stith. On the three lowest panes of glass in the window next to the ground is pictured a piece of rainbow, which I am told has been written about several times, though I have never heard of any attempt at an explanation. This case of picture-taking is extremely rare—it never has occurred before, so far as we know, and probably never will again; and the true secret we may never know. The greatest difficulty is to ascertain how those panes of glass were made sensitive or susceptible to the impression. Well, nature never fails to furnish ways and means when undertaking a piece of work. This house stands nearly north and south, with this window on the east side of the house, near the south chimney, and no light admitted from the west side of that room, and no obstruction on on the east side at that time. Then the bow was on the east side, of course. Mr. Stith says it was a very damp time, and the probability, according to my judgment, is that it was very warm and a good fire burning at the time. Now, it may be that at the proper time a heavy charge of electricity came so near that it caught the place thus prepared for it. The old gentleman closed the window-blinds and the picture was taken, which I am told was a dim amber color at first, but soon assumed all the brilliancy of a rainbow.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Toothpick.

I wish to enter a protest against the toothpick. Not the pick in its proper, useful sphere, it has done good service in its day, and its constant, regular application has doubtless helped preserve many a set of teeth; but it is to the toothpick at the table, in the parlor, on the street, on the cars, at the theatre, in church, that I would enter 10,000 words of protest if they only succeeded in banishing this article to the seclusion to which it belongs. Who has not been sickened at the sight of a wide-opened mouth, its rows of lily-formed, tobacco-stained teeth, the owner of which would insist upon exhibiting to the public, together with his dexterity in fishing out and exposing secreted particles of food. And yet repulsive as this habit is, we see it indulged in, not merely by boors and persons making no claim to gentility, but by gentlemen, and—yes, ladies belonging to our highest classes of society. On many tables of elegance and luxury has the writer seen the little dish of toothpicks standing, which at the close of the meal would be passed around the table, whereupon each member of the party being provided with his weapon would fall to excavating and spitting with all the vigor and enthusiasm imaginable. What a sight! If anyone wishes to see it in its true vulgarity, let him for once be an unoccupied spectator.

At the hotels no one is permitted to leave the dining-room until the omnipresent toothpick is thrust upon him; at hotels of the highest, most luxurious class, how often do we see fine-looking gentlemen, elegant-appearing ladies, issuing from the dining-room, promenading in the corridors, conversing in the parlors, picking, yes, actually picking their teeth, as if no other time or place could be so suitable. Of the multitude of other places where the toothpick is used I will say nothing. What I wish to denounce in stronger words than I have power to utter is its use in public by ladies and gentlemen who lay claim to good society and cultivated manners, and who ought to know better. Why not comb one's hair, brush one's teeth, clean one's nails, in short, perform any other little personal duties in public, if toothpicking is allowable? To those who claim the practice to be a necessary one, I would refer the ancient Romans, who frequently topped off a banquet with a good old emetic, furnished them by their host, for the purpose of relieving them of the superfluous quantity of food they carried upon their stomachs. A later civilization has outgrown the emetic; may a still later outgrow the toothpick. When used let them be confined to the privacy of one's own room, or to any place apart from those where they are so manifestly out of place.—Cor. The Inter-Ocean.

The Printers' Bible, issued before 1702, contained an absurd misstatement in which the Psalmist was pathetically made to say the "printers persecuted him without a cause," instead of princes.

In a Poet's Sanctuary.

A winter twilight and a golden silence
Through all the glowing, fire-lit room pervades
Enthroned in chair of state he sits, surrounded
By shadowy guests—whom the world hails a poet. All day long he's wrought
With zest unwearied at the forge of thought,
Forth from her fires, by Inspiration fanned,
To living flame, has drawn with eager hands
Bits of crude matter—with her silver sledge
To shapeliness has beaten rough edge;
Rounded to perfect cadence each imperfect measure.
Has to himself afforded rarest pleasure—
As each brave stroke has set her anvil ringing
To the sweet song his glad soul has been singing
Unto herself, while round his head has flashed and played
A brilliant cataclysm of fancies, self created,
Unnoted until twilight bells have rung the curtain down
Upon the changeful drama of the day,
The song-crowned hours, so lightly all have flown!
Nor may he bid them stay—
Since fast to embers are his forge fires falling,
And Poesy her handmaids has withdrawn.
Suppressing, so, undue endeavor, calling
Him back, to sojourn 'til another dawn
In a more real world. With caressing hand
Each lightly touches him, breathing "Good night"—
Gather in haste their potent, magic wands,
Then vanished out of sight.
Now, at his panel comes the gentle tap
Of earthlier fingers—enters another guest,
A child, with swift feet, through the shadowed spaces,
And lifted to his lap,
With clasping arms and rose-red lips, woos
Him to love and rest.

—Sarah Louise Morris.

In the Norwegian Mountains.

On the threshold as we depart stand the pretty Budeier (dairy maids) in the neat costume of the people in the Guldbrandsdal Valley, nodding a tender farewell to us and wishing us a hearty "Lykke paa Reisen." Yes, there they stand, following us with their gaze as we proceed along the steep mountain path till we disappear from view in the rocky glen. I said "path." Well, that is the name assigned to it, but never did I imagine the existence of such a riding "ladder," and it may well be necessary to have the peculiar race of mountain horses found here for a rider to get safely to his journey's end. Now the road lies through rapid mountain streams where the roaring waterfall may in an instant sweep man and beast into a yawning abyss below, and now across the precipice, where the lake divides the mountains, and death lurks a yard to your left. Again across the steepest slopes, where nature appears to have amused herself by tossing masses of jagged, tottering rocks in heaps, and where no ordinary horse's hoof would find a safe hold. But if you only watch these brave and sagacious little animals, how carefully they consider the slightest movement and measure the smallest step, they will inspire you with the greatest confidence, and you will continue your journey on their back without the slightest fear, along the wildest path, on the edge of the most awe-inspiring abyss. And should one of these excellent cobs stumble, which happened once or twice during our ride, it is only on comparatively safe ground, where probably the horse does not consider much attention is required. We now climb still higher; gradually the sound of cow bells and the soft melodies from the Lur (the Norse alpenhorn) are wafted into space, and in return a sharp, chilly gust of wind called Fjeldsno sweeps along the valley slopes, carrying with it the last souvenir of society and civilization. We have long ago left the populated districts behind, the mountain nature stands before us, and surrounds us in all its imposing grandeur. The roar of the mighty Bæver river is the only sound which breaks the impressive silence, and even this becomes fainter and fainter as we mount higher and higher, and the mass of water decreases and the fall becomes steeper and steeper, until at last the big river is reduced to a little noisy, foaming brook, skipping from rock to rock, and plunging from one ledge to another, twisting its silvery thread into the most fantastic shapes. — Translated from Oscar Frederick, King of Norway and Sweden—Temple Bar.

A Great Year For Chewing Gum.

This is a great gum year in Maine, especially on the Penobscot, and now that the sun is climbing up into the north a little and the lumbermen are coming out, the air is fairly redolent with the perfume of the spruce. The logs, knees, and bark are not the only valuable part of the great timber tree, for the gum is worth considerable even in its rough state, just as it is hacked from the crotches of the old trees There are two or three firms here which buy large quantities of it from the lumbermen and gum-hunters for the purpose of refining it, as they say. But as a general thing the refining consists in adulteration with rosin. They throw it into a big kettle, bark and all, and boil it to about the consistency of thick molasses, skimming the impurities off as they rise to the surface. Then, if the purpose be to adulterate, some lard or grease and a lot of rosin is added, and in some cases a little sugar. The mixture then becomes thicker, and, after more stirring, is poured out on a slab, where, while it is yet hot, it is rolled out in a sheet about a quarter of an inch thick, and then chopped with a steel die into pieces half an inch wide and three-quarters of an inch long. These pieces are wrapped in tissue paper and packed in wooden boxes. There are two hundred pieces in a box. Some gum is treated in this way without adulteration.

The best gum comes from no particular locality, but always from the biggest trees. The doctors up here say chewing gum benefits the teeth. The loggers, in their many idle hours by the camp fire, whittle out miniature barrels from blocks of cedar or white-pine, hollow them out, and fill them with the choicest gum the woods afford for gifts to their sweethearts, children, or friends when they "come down" in the spring. Others, who go into the woods for gum alone, bring down big bags of gum, and sell it to the manufacturers of the imported article. Up here adulterated gum is called patent gum.—New York Sun.

UNEQUAL REWARDS.

There is considerable discussion as to the preparation of medals, etc., to confer upon the members of the volunteer force who served in the Northwest. It is all very well to recognise their services. It is indeed an eminently proper thing to do, but we are sure that the circumstances demand that something more substantial than a mere medal should be presented them. Glory is good; but glory, like fine words, "butters no parsnips." The offer of 320 acres of Northwest lands to each volunteer serving in the Northwest, on condition that he do the usual settlement duties, is little less than an impertinence. It is not probable that one in ten will accept it. We have before pointed out that the least the government could do was to make the volunteers a present of the land, out and out, and clear them of taxes during their natural lives. This should be the least they should do, especially when Gen. Middleton receives $20,000 in cool cash and when the government caused an extra $500 to be voted to members of the House for an extra few weeks sitting in cushioned seats. The volunteers spent three or four months with insufficient food. They had, unlike members of Parliament, no nutritional cock-tails to "brace them up" for the next day's duties. They toiled day and night and slept in the winter's snow, on frozen ground and sodden prairie, and a petty pittance of $50 per man was all they have received. Most of the volunteers who went to the Northwest left good situations at the call of duty and they return to find them filled. Many of them are out of employment and find situations hard to get. All the rewards should not be confined to the feathers and gold braid of the expeditionary force. The citizen soldiers, who sacrificed so much, who did the work, did the fighting and bore the "burden and heat of the day," should be substantially remembered. Giving them a medal or a scarf-pin of merely sentimental value is a trumpery recognition of their services and sacrifices.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A memorial volume, containing the history of the life and career of late Col. A. H. T. Williams, is about to be issued in Port Hope, and no doubt it will meet with a ready sale among the hosts of admirers of that gallant and dashing officer.

It is well for young Liberals to remember that the time for holding the Young Men's Liberal Convention in Toronto is Tuesday and Wednesday, 15th and 16th of September. Some papers have given erroneous dates.

Lord Derby reminds those who weep over the decay of British trade, that fifteen years ago the total value of imports and exports was £530,000,000. Now it is £730,000,000, a huge increase. And he added: "Although in consequence of the extreme cheapness which has prevailed of recent years, the apparent value has diminished, the real volume of our trade has not diminished, but is actually increased."

Mr. H. A. Ward, the Conservative candidate for East Durham, has issued his address to the electors. He evidently does not intend to commit himself by laying down any platform, his future course of political action in the event of his election being contained in his promise: "without giving any special pledge" to "give a fair and generous support to the present Administration at Ottawa." This is very brief; but, how comprehensive. A man who pledges himself to give a fair and generous support to Sir John Macdonald "goes it blind" with a vengeance, and is prepared for anything in the shape of political crookedness.

Tree Planting.

Tree planting should now be carried on with earnestness by all lovers of forestry. Accordingly to good authority, the first two weeks of August is a favorable time for transplanting evergreens. The one important point to observe in transplanting is to protect the roots from exposure to the sun or air. The roots being resinous, the slightest exposure hardens them, and thus kills the tree.

Days That are Dark.

Ottawa Correspondence Provides the Public Exchequer of Canada—Peculiar Methods of "Facilitating the Operations of the Canada Temperance Act."

OTTAWA, Aug. 3.—The Canada Gazette contains an Order-in-Council, passed on the recommendation of the Minister of Inland Revenue, permitting distillers to remove spirits from their respective distilleries into counties where the Scott Act is in force in quantities of ten gallons. In order to ascertain the meaning of this move, your correspondent called at the office of the Commissioner of Inland Revenue. Mr. Miall, the commissioner, was absent, and Mr. Nimsworth was found to be acting in his place. In reply to inquiries, that gentleman stated that the Inland Revenue Act prohibits distillers from removing less than 40 gallons of spirits. Representations had recently been made to the Government, that this restriction did much to hamper the trade of distillers in Scott Act counties. "In order to facilitate the operations of the Canada Temperance Act," the Order-in-Council states—although it is apparent that it is the distillers operations that are facilitated—"the quantity that can be shipped is reduced to ten gallons."

Mr. Nimsworth volunteered the information that private parties in Scott Act counties had no right to be deprived of their liquor by temperance people, and that the Government felt that 40 gallons was too much to ask them to purchase at one time.

It was pointed out that "private parties" do not usually buy from a distiller, but from a wholesale or retail dealer.

"Oh yes, but you must remember," said Mr. Nimsworth, "the Government under the McCarthy Act is issuing licenses in Scott Act counties, and dealers there must be supplied."

It is quite apparent that this is another step towards discrediting the Scott Act, and making it unworkable. It is also a significant fact, that the Order-in-Council is certified as having been passed on the 13th of May last, nearly three months ago. Why has it been concealed and held back all this time? It is evident the Government felt that it would not be judicious to publish it while Parliament was in session, hence the delay. If, as Mr. Nimsworth states, the Inland Revenue Act does not permit the removal from distilleries of less than 40 gallons, why did Mr. Costigan not, when tinkering with other matters, procure the assent of Parliament to the change now announced as having been made?

Mr. Small, who championed the whiskey interest in the House, spent some days here recently, and could probably throw some light on the subject.—London Advertiser.

Hon. Thomas White, Minister of the Interior.

The Hamilton Times celebrates the accession to office of Mr. Thomas White by the following politico-biographical sketch:—To-day Mr. Thomas White, of Montreal, becomes Minister of the Interior. He has earned the promotion by long services in the Tory ranks, and his many acquaintances in Hamilton and vicinity will not be sorry that his ambition is at last gratified. We do not think that the accesion of Mr. White will greatly strengthen the Ministry. The Department of the Interior has to deal with the affairs of the Northwest, and Mr. White not long ago insulted the settlers by describing them as "spoon-fed." He is not popular, even among the Tories, in the House of Commons, for he has chiefly distinguished himself as a printing grabber. The Gazette, in which he is largely interested, has fattened upon Government subsidies, and other Tory members have wondered why Mr. White should get so much more than they got. Mr. White is a native of Quebec and a resident of that Province, though he sits for an Ontario constituency. He replaces an Ontario man in the Cabinet, and will be counted as an Ontario representative, which he is not in fact nor in interest. He is bound by his circumstances to serve the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal, when their interests clash with the interests of Ontario and her cities. Mr. White is a fluent speaker, but lacks sincerity, and he is prone to talk about subjects of which he knows but little, because it is so easy for him to talk. In the House he has been often tripped. It was he who, when confronted by Hon. Donald A. Smith on a question of fact, had to admit that he printed an untruth under pressure of political exigencies. It was he who tried to destroy the reputation of Hon. Alexander Mackenzie by atrociously false charges in connection with the steel rails matter. Mr. White has posed as a protectionist since 1877, though his previous record was that of a free trader, and he had before that year delivered some very sensible speeches against supporting manufacturers by 'fiscal props." Mr. White was mentioned as a probable successor to Sir Leonard Tilley in the Finance Department, and it may be that his hold of the Interior portfolio will only be temporary. Sir Leonard is differently constituted from Mr. White. The former can be made believe almost anything, and after sufficient priming by the clerks in the Department he will stand up in the House and preach balance-of-trade nonsense, for instance, with the firm conviction that he is telling the truth. Mr. White would go through the same form to serve the party, but his argument would not convince himself. He belongs to the class, so common among Tory journalists, who write and speak with the belief that those whom they address are deficient in intelligence and can be easily deceived. Sir John Macdonald's new Minister of the Interior is about as big a man as Sir John cares to have about him. He has not sufficient ability to be a formidable rival to his chief, and he has enough ability to serve as handy man. Mr. White will never be a great statesman, for he has no convictions which he is not prepared to swallow—for a consideration. He sits for a constituency in which the Tory majority is large, and we have no idea what arrangements will be made about opposing his re-election.

In the Matter of Milk.

The "Adulteration of Food" Act passed during the last session of Parliament, contains a few paragraphs of interest to milk dealers and consumers. It is provided that if milk is sold, or offered, or exposed for sale, after any valuable constituent has been abstracted, or if water has been added, or if it is the product of a diseased animal, or of an animal fed upon unwholesome food, it shall be deemed to have been adulterated in a manner injurious to health, and such sale, offer or exposure for sale, shall render the vendor liable to penalty; except that skimmed milk may be sold as such if contained in cans bearing upon their exterior, within twelve inches of the tops of such vessels, the word "skimmed" in letters of not less than two inches in length, and served in measures also similarly marked; but any person supplying skimmed milk, unless such quality of milk has been asked for by the purchaser, shall not be entitled to plead the provision of this section as a defence or in extenuation. Nothing in this section shall be interpreted to permit or warrant the mixing of water with milk, or any other process than the removal of cream by skimming. The penalties vary from $10 to $100 fine.

The Blacksmith.

Clang, clang, clang, goes the blacksmith's song,
And the sparks fly far and wide,
As the hammer descends, with his arms so strong,
On the anvil at his side.
When the dusty bellows wheeze and blow,
And the fire burns bright and clear,
And the metal's about in the red-hot glow,
When again the song we hear.

Of my childhood days, I remember well
The cottage old at the foot of the hill,
With its gabled roof and eaves so brown,
Always so lonely and still.
I remember well its owner, too,
With his silvery hair and wrinkled face,
Whose nose was built on so spare a plan
His spectacles could hardly keep their place.

The smithy stood just across the road,
And o'er it the shade of a larch-tree swung,
Where, thro' the long, bright summer time,
The robins builded their nests and sang,
While a brooklet near sang its tinkling tune,
To the buttercups nodding o'er its brim,
And the anvil rang out its merry chime
'Neath the blows of the blacksmith, old and grim.

As plainly as ever I see him now
By his heap of old iron close by the door;
There are plenty of shoes on the pegs in a row,
And the rafters with cobwebs, are festooned o'er.
He could clinch an argument as well as a nail;
If blows came in question, no craven was he;
Whether blows or words, 'twas all the same—
We could hammer them to suit a laughing key.

Rather a learned chap you see,
Taught many a school in his youthful day,
Wrote a short poem once on a time,
And went through Dart—in the part of 'a day.
A sort of a musical character, too,
Tho' not especially good on a swell;
He used to whistle quite frequently,
But what the tune was we never could tell

So he whistled and sang, till one quiet day,
A nameless shadow crept thro' the door—
Then bright grew the face with its crown of gray,
And the spirit was free for evermore.
The anvil is wrapt in oblivion's gloom,
And passed away are the tree and bird,
Where the smithy stood is the sweet clover blooms,
And only the song of the brooklet is heard.

It is said that bees will never sting a person whose head is smeared with molasses. When I was at Washington I said to the engineer of the little building at the foot of the monument: "You have a mighty tall chimney for such a small factory." He silently chalked a mark on the board wall behind him. "What's that for?" I inquired. "You are the 176th person who made that remark," was his answer.—Detroit Free Press.

Most people go up stairs in a heathenish fashion, striking their soles against the steps as harshly as possible, wearing out their leather prematurely and making a disagreeable noise. Some run up, taking two steps at a time, and others always fall two or three times. Going up stairs should be one of the slowest and most deliberate acts of a man's life.

Although doctors, as a rule, are particular in warning others not to attack too many large dinners, there is probably no other body of professional men who find so much honest pleasure in gathering around the festive board.

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter V—Continued.

Never having been to Edinburgh, and wishing to see something of the city, I had proposed staying there for two or three days. During the journey I had suggested this to my wife. She had agreed to it as though place or time was a matter of little moment to her. Nothing, it seemed to me, awoke her interest.

We drove to the hotel and supped together. From our manner we might, at the most, have been friends. Our intercourse, for the time, being confined to the usual civilities shown by a gentleman toward a lady in whose society he is thrown. Pauline thanked me for any little attention to her comfort, and that was all. The journey had been a long and trying one—she looked wearied out.

"You are tired, Pauline," I said; "would you like to go to your room?"

"I am very tired." She spoke almost plaintively.

"Good-night, then," I said; "to-morrow you will feel better, and we will look at the lions of the place."

She rose; we shook hands, and said good-night. Pauline retired to her apartment, whilst I went out for a ramble through the gaslighted streets, and with a sad heart recalled the events of the day.

Husband and wife! The bitter mockery of the words! For in everything except the legal bond Pauline and I were as far apart as we were on that day when first I saw her at Turin. Yet this morning we had vowed to love and cherish each other until death bid us part.

Why had I been rash enough to take Ceneri at his word? Why not have waited until I had ascertained that the girl could love me, or at least ascertained that she had the power of loving at all? The apathy and utter indifference she displayed fell like a chill upon my heart. I had done a foolish thing—a thing that could never be undone. I must bear the consequences. Still I would hope—hope, particularly, for what to-morrow might bring forth!

I walked about for a long time, thinking over my strange position. Then I returned to the hotel and sought my own apartment. It was one of the suite of rooms I had engaged, and next to my wife's. I dismissed, as well as I could, all hopes and fears until the morning came, and, tired with the day's events, at last slept.

My bride and I did not visit the Lakes as I had planned. In two days' time I had learned the whole truth—learned all I could know—all that I might ever know about Pauline. The meaning of the old woman's repeated phrase, "she is not for love or marriage," was manifested to me. The reason why Dr. Ceneri had stipulated that Pauline's husband should be content to take her without inquiring into her early life was clear. Pauline—my wife—my love, had no past!

Or no knowledge of the past. Slowly at first, then with swift steps, the truth came home to me. Now I knew how to account for that puzzled, strange look in those beautiful eyes—knew the reason for the indifference, the apathy, she displayed. The face of the woman I had married was fair as the morn; her figure as perfect as that of a Grecian statue; her voice low and sweet, but the one thing which animates every charm—the mind—was missing!

How shall I describe her. Madness means something quite different from her state. Imbecility would still less convey my meaning. There is no word I can find which is fitting to use. There was simply something missing from her intellect—as much missing as a limb may be from a body. Memory except for comparatively recent events, she seemed to have none. The power of reasoning, weighing and drawing deductions seemed beyond her grasp. She appeared unable to recognize the importance or bearing of occurrences taking place round her. Sorrow and delight were emotions she was incapable of feeling. Nothing appeared to move her. Unless her attention was called to them she noticed neither persons nor places. She lived as by instinct—rose, ate, drank, and lay down to rest as one not knowing why she did so. Such questions or remarks as came within the limited range of her capacity she replied to—those outside it passed unheeded, or else the shy troubled eyes sought for a moment the questioner's face, and left him as mystified as I had been when first I noticed that curious inquiring look.

Yet she was not mad. A person might have met her out in company, and after spending hours in her society might have carried away no worse impression than that she was shy and reticent. Whenever she did speak her words were as those of a perfectly sane woman; but as a rule her voice was only heard when the ordinary necessities of life demanded, or in reply to some simple question. Perhaps, I should not be far wrong in comparing her mind to that of a child—but, alas! it was a child's mind in a woman's body—and that woman was my wife!

Life to her, so far as I could see, held neither mental pleasure nor pain. Considered physically, I found that she was more influenced by heat and cold than by any other agents. The sun would tempt her out of doors, or the cold wind would drive her in. She was by no means unhappy. She seemed quite content to sit by my side, or to walk or drive with me for hours without speaking. Her whole existence was a negative one.

And she was sweet and docile. She followed every suggestion of mine, fell in with every plan, was ready to go here, there, or everywhere, as I wished; but her compliance and obedience were as those of a slave to a new master. It seemed to me that all her life she must have been accustomed to obey some one. It was this habit which had so misled me—had almost made me think that Pauline loved me, or she would not have consented to that hasty marriage. Now, I knew that her ready obedience to her uncle's command, was really due to the inability of her mind to offer resistance, and its powerlessness to comprehend the true meaning of the step she was taking.

Such was Pauline, my wife! A woman in her beauty and grace of person; a child in her clouded and unformed or stunted mind! And I, her husband, a strong man craving for love, might win from her, perchance, at last, what might be compared to the affection of a child to its parent, or a dog to its master.

As the truth, the whole truth, came home to me, I am not ashamed to say that I lay down and wept in bitter grief.

I loved her even now I knew all! I would not even have undone the marriage. She was my wife—the only woman I had ever cared for. I would fulfil my vow—would love her and cherish her. Her life, at least, should be made as happy as my care could make it. But all the same I vowed I would have a settling reckoning with that glib Italian doctor.

Him, I felt it was necessary I should see at once. From him I would wring all particulars. I would learn if Pauline had always been the same—if there was any hope that time and patient treatment would work an improvement. I would learn, moreover, the object of his concealment. I would, I swore, drag the truth from him, or it should cost him dear. Until I stood face to face with Ceneri I should find no peace.

I told Pauline it was necessary we should return to London immediately. She betrayed no surprise; raised no objection. She made her preparations at once, and was ready to accompany me when I willed it. This was another thing about her which puzzled me. So far as things mechanical went, she was as other people. In her toilet, even in her preparations for a journey, she needed no assistance. All her actions were those of a perfectly sane person; it was only when the mind was called upon to show itself that the deficiency became at all apparent.

It was gray morning when we reached Euston Station. We had traveled all night. I smiled bitterly as I stepped on to the platform; smiled at the contrast between my thoughts of to-day and those of a few mornings ago when I handed the wife I had so strangely won into the train, and told myself, as I followed her, that a life of perfect happiness was now about to begin.

His Opinion of Brown.

Nicholas Hill, the brightest lawyer probably that ever practiced in the Albany County bar, was a bluff, hearty, manly fellow, who always said what he meant and meant what he said. Of a deep, acute, logical mind, he was frank withal and could never successfully dissimulate or conceal his true sentiments. An amusing instance of this is given, when, upon a certain occasion, he apologized to a politician (we will call him Brown) for speaking of him in rather harsh terms at a great political meeting of those days. "Brown," said he, "I feel that I have said a great many hard things about you, and now that all the old issues are buried and the follies of the campaign at an end, I feel that I ought to make an apology to you for what has happened and have it settled up." "Oh, don't mind that," replied Brown; "let it pass. If you keep quiet in the future I will be satisfied." "No, no," persisted Hill; "I've called you a public thief, a liar, and a scoundrel." "Never mind, I beg of you," was the polite answer. "But I do," rejoined the lawyer; "I have called you a villain, a scoundrel, a trickster, and—and—I'll be hanged if I don't think so still." It is not narrated that Brown laughed heartily at the candor of his legal friend.—Albany Argus.

Poker at Sea.

Among the plagues which infect Anglo-American steamers are a race of men who play the noble game of poker from the Mersey to Sandy Hook and from Sandy Hook to the Mersey. Of course, if they played it in strict seclusion they ought not to be molested. Every human being had a sacred and indefeasible right, even before the American Constitution was invented, to waste his or her own time in his or her own way. To question this would be to tamper with the foundations of everything. But the liberty which involves compulsion of your neighbor is, as a great philosopher would have said, of a spurious or mixed kind, which even the high priests of "individualism" are not bound to encourage. Poker may be the most exalted form of intellectual exercise in which, with his limited faculties, man is capable of indulging. To make life unendurable for all who do not play poker is a kind of missionary enterprise not part of the inalienable birthright of every free man whose proud boast to the tyrant and the oppressor is that his home is in the setting sun. We are well aware that the axiom "Every man may do as he damn pleases" is dependent on the condition that "every man does not include a nigger or a Mexican." But it has never been held to exclude quiet people who have taken (and paid for) their passage from New York to Liverpool. Such, however, seems to be the construction tacitly placed upon it by certain devotees of poker worship who patronize the steamers of a "very fashionable English line" between those two commercial centres. These gentlemen, if we may employ the word for once in the sense given it by "every charlatan," establish themselves in the smoking room as their own peculiar keep. They garrison it like a fortress and consecrate it to the solemn service of their favorite game. "For a day or two," says the complainant previously cited, "the outsider was allowed his corner, but after that the mysterious and occult worship of poker admitted of no intruders." "Play or treat" was the motto, and the only other course was departure.—The Saturday Review.

A London paper gravely announces that St. Petersburg is anxiously awaiting the arrival of an American pianist who promises, by the aid of electricity, to play twelve pianos simultaneously. Russia's cup of misery at this will soon overflow. It beats Morphy with his twelve simultaneous games at chess.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Bridgenorth.

Several sporting gentlemen drove out this afternoon to attend the Bridgenorth regatta —on Lake Chemong.

Another Attraction.

Arrangements have been made for a base ball match on Monday afternoon at Riverside Park between the Uxbridge Club and the Peterboroughs. This will be another addition to Monday's many attractions.

Volunteers Wanted.

The Auburn Sunday School is badly in need of four or five teachers and a librarian. Will some self-denying Christians fill the gap? Any information desired can be given by applying to Francis Mason, Post Office Block.

No. 3 Military District.

The site for the camp for No. 3 Military District has not yet been selected. It would pay the authorities to look over the many eligible sites in the neighborhood of Peterborough. The camp should have a first-class location occasionally.

Base Ball.

A match will be played on Monday, 10th instant, Citizens' Holiday, on the River Side Park, between the Uxbridge and Peterborough clubs. Game to commence at 2 p. m. sharp. Fire Brigade Band in attendance. Admission 15 cents, ladies free. As the Uxbridge club are the ex-champions of Central Ontario a lively match may be looked for.

City of the Bay.

Remember the grand excursion to Belleville by regular train, leaving Peterborough on Monday next at 7.30 a. m. A good time is expected. The tickets are good for two days and cost only one dollar. Excursionists can have a very pleasant sail on the Bay of Quinte to Massassaga Park, four miles from Belleville. The committee will make all arrangements for the comfort of those in attendance. Tickets at the book stores.

A New Drug Store.

Mr. James McCrea, well and favourably known in Peterborough, and lately with Kenneth Campbell & Co., wholesale druggists, of Montreal, will shortly open a new drug store in the Darcy block, under the Peterborough Business College. The premises are being fitted up for him as quickly as possible, and he expects to be installed and ready for business by September 1st. Mr. McCrea is well known as a capable compounder of drugs, and a courteous merchant, and should meet a large share of public patronage.

The New Post Office.

It is asserted, on what may be regarded as good authority that a compromise has been arrived at in regard to the much disputed question of the selection of the Post Office site. Mr. Phalen's lot at the corner of George and Charlotte streets is said to have been finally purchased and will be made the site of the custom house, but the lot, fronting on Hunter and Water streets, known as the Sawers site, has been chosen for the Post Office, and will be purchased for that purpose. The price to be paid for the latter lot will probably be arranged by arbitration.

The Military Ball.

The arrangements for the grand military ball, under the auspices of "G" Company, this evening, have been perfected, and there is every prospect of its being a grand success. The Midland Railway are issuing tickets from Port Hope and other points at which companies of the battalion are located, at a reduced rate, and a large number of officers and men from these places are expected to attend. The band of the 57th Battalion has been engaged to provide music for the occasion; the Lansdowne rink has been handsomely decorated with festoons of bunting flags, and at the entrance an arch of evergreens has been erected. Every effort has been made to make this one of the most enjoyable entertainments of its kind, and friends of the brave boys of Battoche should show their appreciation by turning out in large numbers.

Bridgenorth Regatta.

Several sporting gentlemen drove out this afternoon to attend the Bridgenorth regatta —on Lake Chemong.

From Belleville.

The Sons of St. Patrick, of Belleville, will be among the visitors to Peterborough on Monday next, it being their annual excursion.

Probable Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meteorological office:—Winds mostly easterly, fine weather, slightly higher temperature.

For Rochester Races.

A number of citizens left town yesterday and this morning to attend the races now in progress at Rochester, N. Y. Among them were Messrs Lundy, Morrow, Tobin, Clancy and Carroll. Several ladies accompanied the excursionists.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	86°	29.25°
1 o'clock	87°	29.27°
3 o'clock	86°	29.25°

Col. Kennedy Considered.

The Imperial war office has generously granted to the widow of the late Col. Kennedy a pension of £50 per year—$250,—and to each of the surviving children $80 per year. No one will deny that this handsome recognition of Col. Kennedy's services is both timely and liberal.

Not Mad, But to be Mad.

Mr. W. S. Cocks, the painter, was busily engaged this morning at the top of a 20 foot ladder in painting a sign on the Kennealy House, when a humorously inclined citizen, happening along, remarked: "Ah! painting the town red?" "No," replied the ready witted painter, "but black, so that it may be read." It is not recorded that the artistic punster fell from his giddy attitude, but the H. C., after scratching his head to facilitate the entry of the joke, walked sorrowfully on.

The John B. Doris Circus.

The advertising car of the John B. Doris circus and menagerie has arrived in town, and is standing near the Charlotte street crossing on the G. T. R. The circus itself will be here on this day week, with its collection of monster elephants, deadly serpents, agile acrobats, athletes and bareback riders, the phenomenal Krao, and the thousand and one other startling novelties, which J. B. Doris has gathered together beneath his mammoth canvass.

The End of Newbold.

The remains of Newbold, who died of brain fever on Saturday last in the Hospital of Ohio State Penitentiary at Columbus, and whose wife and parents are living together in town, arrived here by the noon express today. They were taken charge of by Mr. D. Belleghem, the city undertaker, and were informally interred in the cemetery at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Thus ends a career which in the line affected by its hero is without a parallel in the annals of this country.

Wanted, an Explanation.

Notwithstanding the failure of the Lindsay base ball club to connect yesterday, a large number of spectators assembled at Riverside Park to witness a scratch game got up by the home club. Much disappointment was felt at the non-appearance of the visiters, and conjecture as to the cause of their absence was rife. The general opinion was that they were afraid to face the Peterboro' battery. An explanation and apology is certainly due from the Lindsay club, as much trouble and expense was incurred by the Peterboroughs in preparing the grounds for the match, and in advertising, to say nothing of the lost time and disappointment incurred. It is to be hoped that it will be a satisfactory one.

No home complete or happy without a Light Running New Williams or Domestic Sewing Machine. More of the above machines selling in Canada to-day than any other machine made. Reasons why:—Because they have reached the top of the tree, and are noiseless, light running, and have more improvements than any other machine made. Don't fail to try them before buying, as our prices are lower than other dealers are asking for inferior machines. D. SMART, Bell Organ Office.

Beaverton.

BEAVERTON, Aug. 4.—A very distressing accident occurred yesterday on Thorah Island. During the heavy storm a boy named John M. La Bear, son of Mr. John La Bear, who was walking along the island shore, was struck and killed by a tree, which was blown down.

Norwood.

Mr. Thos. Fraser, who was offered the clerkship of the Second Division Court of the County of Peterborough, has refused the appointment. His largely increasing business demands all his attention, hence the refusal.

Last week Mr. J. B. Pearce was appointed postmaster for this village. He entered upon the duties of the office on Friday. A man better qualified for the position it would be hard to find. The appointment gives general satisfaction.—Register.

Saved By a Dream.

A greasy and odorous emigrant was sleeping peacefully in a Pennsylvania car. A slightly intoxicated and playful passenger was about to wake him, when the brakeman objected.

"Don't disturb his dreams of fatherland," said the manipulator of car-heaters and red lanterns; "let him dream. I have a good deal of respect for a dream, as one saved my life once."

"How was that?"

"Well, it was several years ago. I was on a freight then—the 'Dutch local,' it was called, because we carried passengers. One night something was wrong and I went back to signal the fast express that wasn't more than five or six miles behind us. I sat down on the end of a tie, and as I had been on duty a good many hours I became drowsy and fell asleep. Then I had a dream. I dreamed I was out flagging a passenger, when I went to sleep and failed to signal her. She came rushing down on me, and to this day I can remember the terrible reality of that dream; how I felt as I looked up and saw her big nose not twenty feet away, [illegible] swooped toward me like a demon. Just as it seemed the great wheels were to pass over me, I awoke in a fearful agony and with great drops of sweat on my face. It was the awfullest dream I ever had, but in a second I looked up the track, and I'll be darned if there wasn't No. 16's headlight, growing bigger every second as she came toward me. I reached, for my lantern, and where do you suppose I found it? When I dropped asleep I had lopped down right in front of it, so the engineer of 16 couldn't have seen it at all. If it hadn't been for that dream I'd a-been mixed up with the ballast in about thirty seconds, and so it is but natural I should have some respect for a dream. Let that old emigrant alone, I tell you."—Train Talk in Chicago Herald.

Another Genius Gone.

The Postmaster at Lickskillet, Ark., writes as follows: "Don't send your paper any more to Oscar Hallum, fur he's dead. He wus a mighty good reader, he wuz, and would sometimes read one of your jokes in such a funny way that folks would laugh. 'Twan't what wuz in the artikle, but it wuz the way he read it.

"He oughter been the editor of a paper like your'n. That feller could screw up his mouth an' make a dog laugh. He could holler just like a panter, an' many a man has tuck to his heels when he heard Oscar yellin' in the woods. His daddy allus wanted him to l'arn the shoemakin' trade, but he had too much ability fur any such foolishness as that. If I had er had his knack I woulder fined a show. He couldn't write like a county clerk, but what he wrote was thar. He wa'n't hemmed in by Webster nor none of your spellin' book makers. When an idee popped into his head, and they were everlastingly a-poppin', he jes slammed her down an' let old Webster jog along the best way he could.

"I wish he hader lived, fur it grieved the old man powerful when he died. 'Jist to think,' said he to me t'urther day at the buryin', 'that Oscar should er destroyed so much viddults an' then died. It's mighty nigh more than I could b'ar.' I heerd a fellow say some time ago that you was on the lookout fur a man o' sense, so I thought I'd tell you about him, but he's dead."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Range and Rifle.

The Monthly Match of the Peterborough R. A.

The regular monthly rifle competition of P. R. A. was held at the ranges yesterday afternoon. The attendance was not large, but the shooting, taking into consideration the conditions under which it was carried on, was about up to the average. The wind, though not strong, was of that shifty and variable kind—coming and going in puffs—that is always most perplexing to the marksmen, and consequently high scores were not the order of the day.

The firing was at three ranges, 200, 300 and 500 yards, five rounds at each range. the following are the scores made:

D. Cameron	50
Dr. Bell	47
Lt. R. M. Dennistoun	44

Peter Hansen's Hankerings.

A man named Peter Hansen yesterday entered the fancy goods store of C. B. Routley on George street and asked the young lady in attendance to show him some chains. She proceeded to do so when he seized one of them and made for the street with it. The young lady rushed after him, and seeing a constable coming down the street put him on the track of the thief, who, after a short chase, was captured and placed in durance. He was arraigned before Police Magistrate Dumble this morning on a charge of larceny. He had no defence to offer and the Magistrate, thinking no doubt that Mr. Hansen's hankering after chains might be satisfied by a term of captivity, sentenced him to three months in gaol. He will occupy his spare moments in reflection and the beautifying of the Court House Park.

Belleville.

At the close of the conversazione at Albert College, last night, (Wednesday), a few of the intimate friends of Dr. Jaques assembled in the chapel after the audience had departed, and presented him with an address from the teachers of the college and citizens of Belleville on his resigning the presidency of the college. Dr. Jacques made a very feeling reply in accepting the address and said the kindness of his old associates seemed inexhaustible. It pleased him inexpressibly that during his five weeks' farewells he had met with nothing but kind words.

Apsley.

The Inland House at this place is receiving a new coat of paint which very much improves the appearance of the hotel. The bar has been changed and enlarged, a fine new mirror placed therein, also a lot of new fixtures which makes it second to none in this section of the country. The bar is well stocked with choice brands of cigars and liquors. The proprietor, Mr. W. P. Gray, has added several new rooms to the house, making it a pleasant and comfortable resort for hunters and the travelling public. Mr. Gray is the right man in the right place, he is on hand to attend to the wants of his friends and customers. Mrs. Gray is a kind lady always at her post to administer to the wants and comforts of her friends and callers. There is a large yard, good driving shed and comfortable stabling on the premises. I would recommend any and all wishing to visit this village to give Mr. Gray a call.

Cobourg.

On Tuesday afternoon last a matched race took place at Mr. Jas. Beatty's course, front road, east of Cobourg, between Mr. Henry Carter's "Tariff Chief" and Mr. Frank Richardson's "King Tariff." A good deal of interest was taken in this race, as both are young stallions and sired by "Tariff," the celebrated trotting horse, formerly owned by Mr. Jas. Thomas of Haldimand, and sold by him to Americans for $3,000. "Tariff Chief" was driven by Mr. R. Read, and "King Tariff" by Mr. W. S. Appleby, of Cobourg. The judges were Messrs. Adam Dickson and John Greenwood, of Cobourg, and Mr. Gideon Clarke, of Haldimand. A large crowd assembled to witness the sport both from town and country. The track was in good condition. The race was for $50 a side, mile heats, best three in five. "Tariff Chief" won easily in three straight heats, in 3 min. 20 sec., 3 min. 5 sec., and 3 min. 10 sec., respectively. Very little money appeared to change hands.

Shall Riel be Hanged?

Proposed Meeting in His Behalf at Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—A public meeting to discuss the position of Riel has been called for Sunday afternoon. Among the speakers will be the Hon. R. Laflamme, Q. C., late Minister of Justice, Dr. Frechette, the poet laureate, and several well-known lawyers. It is stated by the promoters that all citizens should reasonably unite in the meeting, as it is a principle that is as much at stake as an individual. The dread penalty, they argue, is never enforced in Great Britain or Ireland for political offences and no capital punishment was inflicted at the close of the American civil war upon those who had borne the most prominent part in fomenting and sustaining the insurrection.

The Whigs and the Radicals.

Mr. Chamberlain Objects to the Stoke-hole and Prefers the Quarter-deck.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Mr. Chamberlain made another speech at Hull last evening. He said it was impossible for the Liberals to be united on all subjects, but the utmost unity was necessary between the Whigs and Radicals. By means of mutual concessions they had hitherto co-operated, but the Whigs had walked the quarter deck, while the Radicals slaved in the stoke hole. If Legislation was over-retarded it might be found that there was sufficient room for all in the party. He hoped, however, that the Whigs and Radicals would unite and oust the Conservatives.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Mr. McWilliam's Reply.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—In the Times I see a communication from Mr. McLeod, in which my name is mentioned. In that article Mr. McLeod makes statements which he knows to be false, but knowing the man, I am not the least surprised at that. For some time Mr. McLeod has been unfriendly to me, for the simple reason that I refused to recommend his appointment as License Inspector for West Peterborough. In a former communication Mr. McLeod says that he only applied for one Government position, and that he holds a letter from Hon. O. Mowat offering him a position which he refused to accept. I say both those statements are false. To my knowledge Mr. McLeod applied for at least three Government positions. As to the letter he refers to, no sane man would put the same construction on it that he does. Mr. Mowat said he would appoint him License Inspector, if he could get a recommendation from any of the prominent men here, but that was where the trouble came in, for there was not a prominent Liberal in the county would give him the necessary recommendation. Mr. McLeod came to me with that letter, and as I always make a practice of telling a man to his face what I think, and believing Mr. McLeod to be an injury if not a traitor to the Liberal party, I told him so in plain English, and that at any rate, the Liberals of this county owed him nothing. Mr. McLeod boasted of the work he did in Durham, and I told him to go there for his reward. At the last Dominion election Mr. McLeod at my recommendation was sent to the country believing he would do less injury to the party there than in the town, but his name had preceded him, and we lost votes by his being there. At the last Local election I recommended his expulsion from the committee rooms. I believed then and am more convinced than ever now that he betrayed the secrets of the committe to a man as unprincipled as himself. When did Mr. McLeod become the champion of the Protestants of this county? Why it is only about two years since he was running around this town like a lunatic drumming up votes to elect a Roman Catholic as secretary of the Reform Association. At that time you would think he was the guardian angel especially appointed to look after the interests of the Roman Catholic party. But he received no support from the Catholics in that movement, for they, as well as the Protestants, believed that he could not do anything from an honest motive. His actions when the gentleman he wanted secretary was elected vice-president, showed his trickery.

His statement that I was not in the Examiner office at the time of his interview with Mr. Stratton shows that he is false to his dearest if not only friend, viz: "Barleycorn." I have always understood that when a man was a little over fu' he saw double, but it appears that although Mr. McLeod bowed to me when he entered the office he did not see me, thus playing false to his dearest friend in not seeing one man when he should have seen two. But who would expect anything but falsehood and deception from a traitor?

As to his remarks about my position in the Orange Society, I can tell him that I have a record as an Orangeman and a Liberal that any young man may well be proud of. My unanimous election to the highest office in the county for twelve or fifteen years shows the position I hold in the hearts of the Orangemen. Mr. McLeod must not think that the Orangemen of Peterborough are banded together for the purpose of insulting or injuring Roman Catholics; we ask equal rights and want all parties to have the same. I have not the slightest fear of any statement Mr. McLeod can make injuring me, I can assure him that his censure is to be preferred to his praise, for nothing could injure a man more in this county than for it to be known that Duncan McLeod is his friend. Yours, etc.,

J. B. MCWILLIAMS.

HIGH MOUNTAIN SPOOKS.

Uncanny Sounds Heard and Mysterious Lights Seen by the Valley Residents.

Superstitious residents of the regions known as Preakness, Haledon, and other suburbs hemmed in by the lofty hills known as High mountain, writes a Patterson, N. J., correspondent to the New York World, place extra bolts on their doors now o' nights and are careful to be indoors "after hours." Numbers of superstitious ones, and some who are not superstitious by any means, are willing to make affidavits that they have heard uncanny sounds proceeding from the heights, and nearly everybody in the vicinity who has been near the foot of the mountain after dark will vouch for the statement that mysterious lights have been seen flitting to and fro up among the trees. No soul lives there, and, as it is said that several murders have been perpetrated there, the villagers state, with a solemn shake of the head, that "the devil is at work and no mistake," and that there are "spooks on High mountain."

A party of the braver and brawnier lads of the bailiwick endeavored to solve the mystery a few nights ago, but they soon returned with white faces and quaking limbs, and informed those in waiting by the stove of the place of rendezvous that it was all well enough for them to be sittin' there toastin' their shins and joken', but if they wanted to find out anything about the spooks they had better make the trip themselves. Upon being mollified with "something hot," they became more communicative, and related to their open-mouthed audience the following hair-curdling tale:

They said they had climbed to the top of the mountain, where the lights had been seen, when all at once they were surrounded by lights that jumped around them and climbed the trees and performed other acrobatic feats. Although they appeared to be right in the midst of the flames not a hair of their head was injured and their clothing wasn't even singed. They smelled phosphorus just as plain as it could be smelled, and while they were wondering what to do next the wind whistled through the trees, producing such unearthly sounds that they came right straight away and let the wind have it all to itself.

Doubting Thomases in the audience plucked up courage and firearms enough to make the trip themselves and they, too, soon returned, looking as pale as the historical ghosts and shaking like rattle-boxes. Nobody showed a disposition to go home, and finally, when the host informed them that it was time to close up, they started off in a group and spent the night together by a hospitable neighbor's fire rather than pass the mountain until daylight did appear.

Since then the phenomena have been witnessed by scores of those who were brave enough to approach within sight of the bleak and densely wooded mountain, and the matter has been the chief topic of conversation in the country stores, in the taverns, in the village schools, and has even been referred to by the local dominies. The town hoodlums are now free of going to the stores after dark, for their parents would not think of sending them where they would not go themselves. The jolly hosts of the roadside taverns are jolly no longer, or must be content to be jolly by themselves, for the loungers now lounge at home.

Old residents say that the same thing occurred just before the last cholera epidemic, and that the lights presage another visitation of that dread scourge. Scores of old timers are willing to wager on this, and prominent citizens are willing to encourage them in their belief, for it is on record that the same thing did occur in 1836, just before death stalked through this section of the country.

Reports from Pike county, Pennsylvania, say that the same phenomena have appeared there just as they did in 1836, and that the citizens of that place become to us like angel-voices, chanting some celestial chorus in the far empyrean above.

As we turn from the faint sweet echoes to look upon the enchanting landscape again, we say to ourselves; This, of all others, must have been the place where the poet-laureate caught the inspiration of his inimitable "Bugle Song." The lakes, the cataracts, the castle, the mountain summits, all are here. We can readily picture the lover looking upon the scene before us and saying with admiration:

The splendor falls on castle walls,
And snowy summits old in story:
The long light shakes along the lakes,
And the wild cataract leaps in glory.

We enter into the full spirit of the scene as he turns, saying:

Blow, bugle, blow! set the wild echoes flying;
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

He seems to speak of the echoes we have just heard, as he cries to his ladylove:

Oh, hark, oh, hear! how thin and clear
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
Oh, sweet and far, from cliff and scar,
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying;
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying!

We enter with a profounder sympathy than would have been possible before into the exquisite beauty and pathos of the closing verse:

Oh, love, they die in yon rich sky;
They faint on hill, or field, or river;
Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow for ever and forever.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 7, 1885.

A PROMISING PILGRIMAGE.

Sir Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Works, will, it is announced, shortly make a tour of Ontario for the purpose of looking over the public buildings in different places. We hope he will find the new Peterborough Customs and Postal Buildings, promised just before the election of 1882, in a good state of preservation. If he decides coming to town, his department had better previously make a definite and final selection of a site. In case he neglects this he will doubtless be torn limb from limb by his rival claimants for the honor—and profit—of having their sites selected. The real object of Sir Hector's proposed visit is to make more political capital for the government. We may expect him to make even more extravagant and liberal promises than before in the name of the government. It is time, one would think, the people saw through these transparent games of their tricky rulers, and verified the Psalmist's prophecy: the hail (of adverse ballots) shall sweep away the refuge of lies.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. Courtney, Deputy Minister of Finance, will leave for England on the 3rd of September.

The best hope in the midst of the present desperate state of the country with its evil government, whose extravagance and corruption are undermining our resources and depriving the moral sense of the people, is a recollection of the proverb: "The darkest hour is just before the dawn."

A public meeting will be held on Monday evening next in the Opera House, Port Hope, in the interests of the Reform candidate, in the Dominion election contest in East Durham. Mr. Preston, the candidate, and Mr. Wm. Paterson, M.P.P., Brantford, will address the meeting.

We shall be glad to notice any indication of the Government treating the volunteers who served in the Northwest with anything like fairness. It is asserted that the Minister of Militia has decided that all who thus served shall be paid up to the first of the present month. This generosity would appear all the more graceful if it were not too plainly an atonement for past neglect and indifference.

The new Minister of the Interior, Hon. Thomas White, if an Ottawa despatch is to be believed, is to create reforms in his department. The despatch states that Hon. Mr. White has arrived in Ottawa and will immediately make a number of changes in the working of the Department. Without giving the new minister two much credit, it may be suggested that any change he may make in so miserably managed a Department, must necessarily be for the better. Things had come to such a pass that they could not possibly be made worse.

It is understood that the Customs Department will prohibit the importation of extracts from the Pall Mall Gazette's last sensation, which have been published in pamphlet form by a Chicago firm, on the ground that they come under that section of the Act prohibiting obscene literature. This is Satan reproving sin to a nicety. The Gazette's revelations, as immoral literature, have not one tenth of the immorality of conception, motive and execution, of the printing scandals engineered by the Government.

The execution of the death sentence upon Riel is likely to engender bitter feelings. The French press of Quebec continue to discuss the unfairness, from their standpoint, of Riel's trial, and the barbarity of executing him under the circumstances. Le Quotidien, of Levis, says that Riel on the scaffold will prove a brand of discord as fierce as ever was the blood of the Aylwards and Scott, and that the party that hangs him, by this very fact alone, will make for itself a host of desperate enemies, who will still be its bitter, uncompromising foes long after the half-breed revolt has become a thing of the past.

The East Durham Contest.

An Appeal to the Electors.

In view of the coming contest in East Durham, an address has been issued to the electors in pamphlet form, and owing to the contiguity of the riding, and the interest attached to the occasion, we re-produce it in these columns as below:

To the Electors of the East Riding of the County of Durham:

It is greatly to be regretted that the necessity has arisen for a new Dominion election in the east riding of the county of Durham. The people deplore the death of Col. Williams, and would, if they could, have saved his life. But life and death are in the hands of a higher power, and all we can do when the fiat has gone forth, is to bow in humble submission to its will. The day of public mourning is over. The body of your late representative lies in its lonely resting place. His soul, we trust, has gone to its heavenly home. There is a duty now left for you to perform,

A GREAT PRACTICAL DUTY,

and for the sake of yourselves and your country I hope you will discharge that duty fairly. As honest, intelligent electors, I believe you will do so. We are all citizens of one common country. Our interests are the same. What benefits one man should benefit all alike. The great majority of us get our living by hard work and "by the sweat of our brow." We have no means to be wasted by the Government or by ourselves. Our only success in life, our only hope of prosperity and comfort depend upon industry and economy. If the Government is wasteful and extravagant, we suffer, because it is the people's money that is wasted, and extravagance begets more public burdens and more taxation. And these will afflict the people of both political parties alike. Your interests and your duty, upon the occasion of this election, therefore is plain: to choose a representative who will best serve his country and best serve you, without reference to any political feelings or inclinations, a representative who will place his COUNTRY FIRST AND POLITICAL PARTY AFTER.

The present Government has been in power for a number of years, and you are now able to look at what it has done and to judge it by the results.

Let us look at the conduct of the Government and Parliament, and at the state of the public finances.—In 1868 the public debt was ninety-three millions of dollars to-day, including a new loan of twenty-four millions about to be made, it will be three hundred millions, equal to a debt of $65 for every man, woman and child of the Dominion, or, taking only the bread-winners and tax payers into account, it is equal to $300 to each of these. The annual interest upon this debt of three hundred millions, including the charges of the financial agents in England, is equal to fifteen millions of dollars, and throws upon the tax payers a yearly burden of $15.

In 1868 the public expenditure was thirteen and a half millions of dollars. During the next ten years, under the government of Sir John Macdonald, it had increased to twenty-three and a half millions. In 1884, under the government of Sir John, it has INCREASED TO THIRTY-ONE MILLIONS.

During the whole period from 1868 the population has increased thirty per cent., while taxation and expenditure have increased one hundred and fifty per cent., and the public debt has increased two hundred per cent.

No one doubts that the expenses of the Northwest rebellion will cost the country five millions in money, equal to an annual tax upon the taxpayers of $5, saying nothing of the loss of life of our young men, and which has left many a home desolate. The government of Sir John Macdonald is fairly chargeable with the cause of this rebellion. It has been shown that they, by their neglect, and by their refusal to do common justice to the half-breeds, the latter became desperate and rebelled. Their lands were, in many instances, taken from them, the patents to others were withheld, and their many petitions for redress were unheeded. It thus cost the country five millions of dollars and the loss of many valuable lives; whereas had the Government done those settlers only scant justice the country would have been saved all this expenditure and all this waste of human life. Owing to the delay of the Government in bringing forward the public business during the early part of the late session of Parliament, when there really was nothing else to do, and to their determination to force the passing of the working of which will cost the country over a half million of dollars a year, the session was prolonged for six months; and for doing this the Government obtained an additional payment to the members, including themselves, of five hundred dollars to each, and the same to the members of the Senate, thus making the indemnity to each $1,500, and throwing $150,000 additional expense upon the people.

A MOST INIQUITOUS FRANCHISE BILL,

The only object of the Government in passing this Franchise Bill is, by the appointment of their friends as revising barristers, to so make over the election rolls as to exclude their opponents and include their supporters. It was a direct interference with the rights of the several provinces, and a most unjust mode of increasing their own power.

It has been well known that the people of the United States are working to make a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and it is well known that the government of Sir John has invariably opposed it. And owing to his carelessness and indifference, in reference to the Fisheries treaty, he has been forced to give the people of the United States the use of our valuable fisheries for this year for nothing—a privilege which cannot be worth much less than a million of dollars—all of which is so much loss to this country.

In 1878, led away by the delusions of the National Policy, as it is called, you again returned Sir John and his party to power. You no doubt thought you were going to be made rich by high taxation. How you were to was more than any one could understand. And it is not probable that you ever gave the subject a thought. By means of it the Government has taken out of the pockets of the people ever since some seven millions of dollars a year, and by means of this money they have gone on increasing the public expenditure year by year, and used the money thus obtained to bribe the electors to return their own supporters to Parliament. And they have also, by excluding foreign competition, made wealthy the manufacturers of the country, by means of this tax and which the people had to pay.

You were told that by means of this National Policy, you would get a higher price for your wool and your wheat and barley and other grain and your labor than you had ever done before, but I ask you if the reverse of this is not the fact? you are as well able to judge of this matter as I am. If you are satisfied with this additional taxation, no one else ought to complain, but if you are satisfied with it you must be a generous and patient people. If you want to get rid of this National Policy you can only do it by electing a different class of men to Parliament, for you will never do it while the present government is in power.

True Even Unto Death.

That was a touching story told by Mr. Gladstone when announcing the death of the Princess Alice in parliament. She had been cautioned by the physician not to inhale the breath of her little boy, who was ill with diphtheria. The little fellow was tossing in his bed in the delirium of fever. The princess stood by the side of her child and laid her hand on his brow and began to caress him. The touch cooled the fevered brain and brought the wandering soul back from its wild delirium to nestle for a moment in the lap of a mother's love. Then throwing his arms around her neck he whispered, "Mamma, kiss me." The instinct of a mother's love was stronger than science, and she pressed her lips to those of her child. And yet there is not a woman in all the world but would say she would not have had a mother's heart if she had not kissed her bairn. And so it will be to the end of time. The mother will kiss her child, the wife her husband and the lover his sweetheart, though death in a thousand forms lay concealed beneath the vermillion coloring of the pouting lips —St. Paul Globe.

OREGON SALMON.

The recent frightful accident which happened to a stage in Southern Oregon can not fail, says the New York Times, to call the attention of the state authorities to the necessity of protecting settlers against the attacks of salmon. The stage in question was crossing Applegate Creek, when it was suddenly attacked by a drove of salmon. The stage was instantly overturned, and the hungry fish swarmed over it, while the stage driver, with great presence of mind, cut the traces of his horses and, throwing himself across the off wheel-horse,—a powerful animal, formerly the property of Dr. Goodrich, of Olympia,—managed to escape. The dispatch which conveys to us this painful story says nothing of the fate of the stage passengers, but, unfortunately, there is every reason to believe that they fell victims to the salmon.

The Oregon salmon has long been regarded by experienced western hunters as the most dangerous animal infesting this continent. It is much larger than the salmon of the Atlantic coast, and, unlike the latter, which is a timid and inoffensive fish, it is fearless, aggressive, and cruel. There is scarcely a river in Oregon which is free from salmon, and many of the streams are rendered practically impassable by the numbers and ferocity of the salmon inhabiting them.

To hunt the Oregon salmon requires iron nerves and great skill in the use of the rifle. The usual practice of the hunter is to hide himself on the bank of a stream and to send in his dogs to rouse the salmon from their lair. When the fish come within gunshot the hunter fires, and unless he kills or disables the game at the first shot his chances for life are small. The infuriated fish will, in most cases, turn upon the hunter whose shot has been ineffective. One blow of the salmon's tail almost invariably proves fatal, and if he can once set his terrible teeth in the flesh of the hunter he can not be shaken off. The only chance of escape is for the hunter to drive his knife into the fish's heart, but such a blow to be effective must be delivered immediately behind the pectoral fin, and it requires the utmost coolness for a man to face the rush of a maddened salmon and wait until he can stab him in the only vulnerable part. Scores of hunters who have successfully fought the grizzly bear have fallen victims to the Oregon salmon, and scores of others, crippled and mangled, survive to tell the story of their blood-curdling experience while in the very jaws of a monster fish.

Were the salmon to confine themselves wholly to the water they would be comparatively harmless, for no man would be in danger unless he ventured into the salmon pool. But, unlike most of our American fishes, the Oregon salmon is in the habit of leaving the water and wandering through the forest in search of prey. Men, women, and children have often been chased for long distances by salmon on the lonely Oregon roads, and an enormous number of sheep and cattle have been killed and devoured. Two years ago the forest in the neighborhood of East Melville, in Southern Oregon, was infested by a pair of salmon of unusual size and ferocity. Hardly a night passed that some settler did not lose a valuable domestic animal, and no less than five human lives were sacrificed almost within sight of the Methodist meeting-house. The people of the town never went out of their houses unarmed, and they lost so much sleep in consequence of the nightly and incessant roaring of the fish that life was really a burden to them. The town authorities offered a reward of $1,000 for the head of either of the two salmon, but no local hunter was bold enough to make the attempt to gain it. These formidable fish were finally killed by a party of hunters, nine in number, from Tacoma, who, assisted by a pack of well-trained fish-hounds, tracked the salmon to their lair in a small pool of stagnant water and shot them with a Gatling gun. Twenty-two bullets were found in the body of the male and seventy-four in that of the female. The former fell dead at the first fire, but the latter, although severely wounded, rushed on the hunters, and succeeded in killing one and disabling eight dogs before she was finally conquered.

In winter, the Oregon salmon, rendered more fearless than ever by want of food, roam over the country in packs and droves of from twenty-five to a thousand fish. No exact statistics as to the annual loss of life by salmon in Oregon are at present accessible, but it is believed that in proportion to its population Oregon loses as many inhabitants yearly by salmon as India loses by tigers.

The only way in which to meet this great evil is for the state government to offer a reward of, say, $100 for every salmon killed within its borders. Such an offer would cause an instant emigration of thousands of fearless hunters from every state in the Union to Oregon. Some lives would, of course, be lost, but the salmon would soon be practically exterminated, and it would become possible for a stage to pass even Applegate's creek without being attacked and destroyed by salmon.

And yet how fair the girl looked as she stood by my side on that wide platform! How strangely that air of repose, that sweet, refined, calm face, that general appearance of indifference, contrasted with the busy scene around us, as the train disgorged its contents. Oh, that I could sweep the clouds from her mind and make her what I wished!

I had found some difficulty in settling what course to pursue. I decided, after ventilating various schemes, that I would take Pauline to my own rooms in Walpole street. I knew the people of the house well, and felt certain she would be taken care of during my absence; for, after a few hours' repose, it was my intention to start in search of Ceneri. I had written from Edinburgh to Walpole street, telling the good people there to be ready for me and whom to expect; moreover, I had again appealed to my faithful old servant, Priscilla, and begged her to be at the house awaiting my arrival. For my sake, I knew she would show every kindness to my poor girl. So to Walpole street we went.

All was in readiness for us. Priscilla received us with eyes full of curious wonder. I saw that her sympathies were at once enlisted by Pauline's appearance. After a cup of tea and something to eat, I begged Priscilla to lead my wife to her room, that she might take the rest she needed. Pauline, in her childlike, docile way, rose and followed the old woman.

"When you have seen to Mrs. Vaughan's comforts, come back to me," I said, "I want to speak to you."

Priscilla, no doubt, was only too eager to return to me. I felt she was brimming over with questions about my unexpected marriage; but I checked her volubility. My face must have told her that I had nothing pleasant to communicate. She sat down, and, as I desired her to do, listened without comment to my tale.

I was compelled to confide in some one. The old woman, I knew, was trustworthy and would keep my affairs secret. So I told her all, or nearly all. I explained as well as I could Pauline's peculiar mental state. I suggested all that my short experience brought to my mind, and I prayed Priscilla, by the love she bore me, to guard and be kind in my absence to the wife I loved. The promise being given I threw myself upon the sofa and slept for several hours.

In the afternoon I saw Pauline again. I asked her if she knew where I could write to Ceneri. She shook her head.

"Try and think, my dear," I said.

She pressed her delicate finger tips against her brow. I had always noticed that trying to thing always troubled her greatly.

"Teresa knew," I said to assist her.

"Yes, ask her."

"But she has left us, Pauline. Can you tell us where she is?"

Once more she shook her head hopelessly.

"He told me he lived in Geneva," I said. "Do you know the street?"

She turned her puzzled eyes to mine. I sighed, as I knew my questions were useless.

Still, find him I must. I would go to Geneva. If the man was a doctor, as he represented himself, he must be known there. If I could not find any trace of him at Geneva I would try Turin. I took my wife's hand.

"I am going away for a few days, Pauline. You will stay here until I return. Every one will be kind to you. Priscilla will get you all you want."

"Yes, Gilbert," she said, softly. I had taught her to call me Gilbert.

Then, after some last instructions to Priscilla, I started on my journey. As my cab drove from the door I glanced up at the window of the room in which I had left Pauline. She was standing there, looking at me, and a great wave of joy came over my heart, for I fancied that her eyes were looking sad, like the eyes of one taking leave of a dear friend. It may have been only fancy, but, as I had never before even fancied the expression there, that look in Pauline's eyes was some comfort to carry away with me.

And now for Geneva and il dottore Ceneri!

CHAPTER VI.

UNSATISFACTORY ANSWERS.

I traveled in hot haste, as fast as steam would bear me, to Geneva, where I at once began my inquiries as to the whereabouts of Dr. Ceneri. I had hoped that finding him would be an easy matter. His words had given me the impression that he practiced in the town. If so, many people must know him. But he had misled me or I had deceived myself. For several days I hunted high and low; inquired everywhere, but not a soul could I find who knew the man. I called on every doctor in the place; one and all professed entire ignorance of such a colleague. At last I felt certain that the name he had given me was a fictitious one, or that Geneva was not his abode. However obscure a doctor may be, he is sure to be known by some of his professional brethren in the same town. I decided to go to Turin and try my luck there.

It was on the eve of my intended departure. I was strolling about, feeling very sad at heart, and trying to persuade myself that I should fare better in Turin, when I noticed a man lounging along the opposite side of the street. As his face and bearing seemed familiar to me, I crossed the road to see him to better advantage. Being clothed in the inevitable tourist suit he presented the appearance of an ordinary British traveler—so much so that I believed I must be mistaken. But I was right, after all. In spite of his changed attire I recognized him the moment I drew near. He was the man with whom Kenyon had engaged in a wordy war outside San Giovanni—the man who had remonstrated with us for our expressed admiration of Pauline—the man who had walked away arm in arm with Ceneri.

The chance was too good a one to be lost. He would, at least, know where the doctor was to be found. I trusted his memory for faces was not so retentive as mine; that he would not connect me with the unpleasant passage which occurred when we last met. I walked up to him, and raising my hat requested him to favor me with a few moments' conversation.

I spoke in English. He gave me a quick, penetrating glance, then acknowledging my salutation, professed, in the same language, his wish to place himself at my service.

"I am trying to ascertain the address of a gentleman who I believe lives here. I think you will be able to assist me."

He laughed. "I will if I can—but being like yourself, an Englishman, and knowing very few people, I fear I can be of little help to you."

"I am anxious to find a doctor named Ceneri."

The start he gave as he heard my words; the look, almost of apprehension, he cast on me, showed me that he recognized the name. But in a second he recovered himself.

"I cannot remember the name. I am sorry to say I am unable to help you."

"But," I said, in Italian, "I have see you in his company."

He scowled viciously. "I know no man of the name. Good-morning."

He raised his hat and strode away.

I was not going to lose him like that. I quickened my pace and came up with him. "I must see him upon an important matter. It is no use denying that he is a friend of yours."

He hesitated, then halted. "You are strangely importunate, sir. Perhaps you will tell me your reason for your statement that the man you seek is my friend?"

Civilization and Eyesight.

Foreigners who visit us, says the Philadelphia News, are struck by the number of short-sighted persons they see. Mgr. Capel has recently expressed his opinion on the subject, and attributes the decay of the eyesight to small type in the universally read newspapers and to the lack of attention paid to proper light and proper arrangement for light in our public schools.

Doubtless much short-sightedness is due to these causes, but more is due to the habits of civilization, to the increase in reading, and especially in reading by artificial light. Dr. Brudenell Carter, an eminent English oculist, has just read a paper on this subject before the Society of Arts, at whose meeting the anecdote was told that a clear-sighted Englishman in Zululand, by the assistance of a powerful binocular glass, made out two distant objects on the horizon. One was a larger speck than the other, and he guessed that this was a mounted man, whose companion was walking. The Zulus with him looked in the direction indicated, and at once informed him who the gentleman was, and that he was accompanied by his wife on foot.

This story may seemed forced, but no artist, naturalist, or other person who is practiced in the art of vision—for art it is, and we call such persons "trained observers"—will fail to attest to its truth in a greater or less degree, according to his experience. Dr. Carter says that 25 per cent of the children examined by him in a London school had defective eyes. In Germany the proportion has been shown to be about the same.

In antiquity short-sightedness was scarcely known. M. Francisque Sarcey, the scholarly dramatic critic of the Paris Temps, compares the enormous theaters of Greece and Rome, which held 30,000 spectators, none of whose auditors had opera-glasses or spectacles, yet could see everything with ease, with our little theaters, holding one-tenth as many, in which that part of the audience in the back rows is obliged to have opera-glasses if a sight of the stage is desired.

Nearly all of the observers of our defective eyes agree that they are caused by excessive reading and by artificial light. But there is more behind these. It is known that any muscle of the body can be developed by training. It is so with the eye, as any landsman who has flattered himself on his far, clear sight can testify when he has gone to sea and been mortified to learn how much farther off and clearer the commonest sailor, who is practiced in sweeping the horizon, can detect and describe objects. Yet we doubt if one reader in a thousand has ever tested his own eyes or those of his children for any defect, let alone any purpose of training them. This is a very serious neglect. In our colleges the other muscles of the body are carefully studied and exercised. Who ever heard of a club or a group of persons devoted to training their eyes! The result is that we modern dwellers in cities go through life half blind and growing more so, when a little attention would not only strengthen a most important "sense," as well as reveal beauties in nature that we literally know not of.

Young Smithers has been courting a lady whose first husband was relieved of her affections by process of law. She is a practical lady, and has learned caution by her experience.

"What income have you, Mr. Smithers?" said the fair one to him the other evening.

"Three hundred dollars a month."

"Three hundred—let me see—a hundred and fifty. No. I couldn't get enough alimony out of that to make it worth the trial."

The royal seraglio of Persia contains no Europeans or male persons over the age of 11. Each royal favorite has her separate pavilion and her staff of servants, her equipages, her jewels and her revenue. The principal favorite generally has some high-sounding title conferred upon her, such as "The Delight of the State." The ladies are never seen abroad unveiled, save one or two of the handsomer or more flighty of their number, who sometimes, when driving in their glass coaches, purposely give a rather liberal display of florid charms to passers-by in carriages or on horseback. It is quite certain that no man save the King enters the royal harem, or, having done so, leaves it alive.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 7, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Progressing.

The restoration of St. Peter's Cathedral is progressing so rapidly that tenders have been invited for the plastering work. The conditions under which it is to be undertaken may be learned at the office of the architect, Mr. J. E. Belcher, C.E.

Preb's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Fresh east and south-east winds, cloudy weather with rain, slightly higher temperature.

Mr Dumble's Decrees.

Patrick Canavan and Michael Murray were arraigned at the Police Court this morning for drunken and disorderly conduct. They were offered the alternative of contributing $2 to the wealth of the municipality, or a ten days' sojourn with Governor Nesbitt, at the top of the Court House Hill.

The Track.

There will be a match race at 7 o'clock this evening in the Driving Park between J. E. McIntyre's two running horses, Nancy Lee and Graybird. The race will be run in half mile heats, best two in three, and as the horses, which will be ridden by jockeys in regular costume, are said to be evenly matched, a close race may be expected. There will be no charge for admission, so a large crowd will doubtless be present.

City of the Bay.

Remember the grand excursion to Belleville by regular train, leaving Peterborough on Monday next at 7.30 a. m. A good time is expected. The tickets are good for two days and cost only one dollar. Excursionists can have a very pleasant sail on the Bay of Quinte to Massassaga Park, four miles from Belleville. The committee will make all arrangements for the comfort of those in attendance. Tickets at the book stores.

The Military Ball.

The ball held last evening in the Lansdowne rink under the auspices of G Company, 57th Battalion, although not so largely attended as was anticipated, nevertheless proved very successful. The building was suitably decorated with flags, buntings and evergreens, and brilliantly illuminated by the electric light. The Band and Orchestra of the 57th Battalion were present and dancing was kept up with great zest until early morning, when the party broke up highly pleased with the entertainment. An excellent supper was provided by Mr. Wm. Ruth. During the early part of the evening the galleries were filled with spectators, who seemed to enjoy the brilliancy of the scene presented. The arrangements made were good and everything went off in a most pleasant manner.

Shamrocks Ontaries.

Mr. G. H. Giroux, Secretary of the P.L.C., received a letter from the Shamrock Lacrosse Club of Montreal, this morning, enclosing the names of the team which will play here against the Ontarios on Monday next. They are as follows:—Prior, McKay, Daly, Maguire, Butler, Hart, Tribey, Hamilton, A. O'Hearn, Devine, Green, Cregan and Barry. Mr. M. Polan, the Shamrocks' well-known field captain will accompany them. The following players will represent the Ontarios:—Clews, D. Clark, Dan. Small, D. Hull, B. Ryan, R. McPherson, T. Crown, Wilson, Foley, Gerry, O'Neil and Martin, and Dan. A. Rose will captain them. Both teams have their best men on, and the finest game ever seen in Peterborough may be anticipated. Mr. H. LeBrun has received from Messrs. Welch & Trowern, the well-known manufacturing jewellers, the design for the pins to be presented to the winning team. It consists of a lacrosse, crossed with a winged running shoe, and will be very appropriate for a lacrosse emblem. The pins will be here to-morrow and will be placed on exhibition in Mr. LeBrun's window.

The Regatta.

A Day of Aquatic Sport at Bridgenorth.

The long talked of regatta at Bridgenorth came off yesterday afternoon and was a complete success, the clear sky and pleasant weather inducing a large number of those interested in aquatic sport to turn out to see the races, and the calm unruffled surface of the lake, smooth as the plate glass of the Golden Horseshoe, being highly favorable to keen competition among the contestants. The events competed were a single scull race in lapstreak boats, about a mile and a half with a turn; a double canoe race, which bought out a large field of starters and proved an exciting struggle; and a canoe race for boys. The management of the regatta was in the hands of Mr. L. Fobert, of the Bridgenorth Hotel, whose arrangements were most complete and satisfactory. It is to be regretted that there was not a larger attendance from town, as Mr. Fobert went to considerable pains in getting up the regatta, and is not likely to be financially a gainer by it. The judges were Mr. H. LeBrun and Mr. Alex. [illegible] starter. The following are the winners in the various events:—

SINGLE SCULL RACE (2 entries).—'Gus Lech, 1st; George Stevenson, 2nd. Lech won easily by about three lengths.

DOUBLE CANOE RACE.—J. Taylor and G. Taylor (Indians), 1st; George Ritchie and George Bramwell, 2nd; Jas. Taylor and Wm. Nichols, 3rd. A hot race took place between Ritchie and Bramwell, and Taylor and Nichols for second place, the former pair only coming in a short distance ahead at the finish. Joe Daly and Robert Montgomery, J. Carr and G. Coon also started in the race. Daly and Montgomery made a good start, and looked like winners at first, but after about half the course had been traversed, Joe Daly was so struck by the beauty of the landscape that he stoped paddling, to have a good look at it. This put him and his mate out of the race, although they came in at the heel of the hunt with a fine burst of speed.

CANOE RACE FOR BOYS.—C. Dunbar and a young Indian named Wheathem started in this, the latter winning by about two lengths, after a closely contested race.

The prizes for the single scull race and double canoe race, were handsome medals, while the winner of the boys' race became the possessor of a silver cup. Mr. Fobert intends to arrange another regatta before long, at which it is expected the towns-people will be present in larger numbers.

An Afterthought.

After the conclusion of the cheese market yesterday afternoon, Mr. B. Green purchased from the factories in Victoria county the cheese made in the first half of July—from 800 to 1,000 boxes.

Civic Holiday Lacrosse.

A match between the Norwood Lacrosse Club team and the juniors of the Peterboroughs will be played on the Riverside Park grounds on Tuesday afternoon, August 11th, Civic Holiday. Ball faced at 2 p.m.

First.

The first load of new barley was delivered this morning at Calcutt's brewery. The grain, which was grown by Mr. Robert Roseborough of Smith, was plump and bright and was sold at 60c. per bushel.

Body Recovered.

The body of Samuel Graham, the unfortunate young man who was drowned on Sunday in the Lovesick Rapids, was discovered yesterday afternoon near the spot where he went down, and was taken to his late home in Ashburnham. The funeral took place from the corner of Elizabeth and Lake streets, Ashburnham, at 3 o'clock this afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery.

Outside Appreciation.

The carriage work turned out by Messrs. Porter Bros., from its excellence of construction and finish is not only appreciated and demanded at home, but its reputation has extended abroad. The firm has, ready for shipment, a fine delivery wagon, made to the order of Mr. C. Bounsall, granite and marble works, Bowmanville. It is a neat and well made vehicle, highly creditable to the firm producing it.

Peterborough Dry Goods Palace.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. are opening many new lines from Europe, much in demand and scarce at this season. Their stock is now very large and complete, comprising novelties, all kinds and qualities of dry goods, millinery, etc., at marvellously low prices. You can rely on getting a good assortment and most decided bargains at the "Golden Lion." They are clearing all remnants and summer goods in order to make room for their extended fall importations.

Cricket.

A match will be played to-morrow afternoon on the Cricket Grounds between a team representing the Peterborough Cricket Club and a team chosen from the employes of the various banks. The club team will be selected from the following gentlemen:—H. T Strickland, Thos. Rutherford, Dr. George Burnham, C. J. Logan, J. E. Hammond, H. A. Hammond, W. Craven, H. B. Carter, E. A. Peck, W. Strathy, R. B. Rogers, M. Sanderson, James Montgomery, W. Sabine, Max. Hamilton and James Irwin. The wielders of the willow on behalf of the banks will be as follows:—Bank of Montreal, C. A. Lawford and R. M. Hamilton; Ontario Bank, C. McGill, A. E. Ames, James Morris, E. Forst; Bank of Toronto, A. St. A. Smith, G. H. Geale, P. E. S. Cooper and G. A. Hamilton; Bank of Commerce, G. F. Orde and — Grey. Norley, the coach of the club, plays with the bankers.

Peterborough's Prime Cheese.

Low Prices and Small Sales the Order of the Day.

The regular fortnightly cheese market was held yesterday afternoon in the Council Chamber. The President, Mr. Drummond, occupied the chair, and there was a large representation from the various factories. The following are the factories represented and the number of boxes offered by each of them:

The following buyers were present:—Messrs. W. Cluxton, W. H. Wrighton, J. W. Flavelle, and B. Green, Lown, and Mr. W. Cook, Belleville.

The Liverpool quotations was announced as 39s.

Mr. Cluxton made an offer of 6 13-16 cts. for 1500 boxes, with his own choice of factories, but was unable to complete a car-load at that rate. A similar offer for a thousand boxes fell through for the same reason, and the only transaction was the sale to him of 200 boxes from Norwood, 155 from Warsaw, 113 from Pine Grove and 72 colored and 82 white from Normanhurst, all at 7c. There seemed to be little desire on the part of the factories to sell at the rate offered by Mr. Mr. Cluxton, and no inclination on the part of other buyers to bid.

Canada's Fallen Heros.

A gentleman in town has received from friends in Winnipeg two photographs, representing the last resting place of the slain heroes of the 90th Battalion, in St. John's Cemetery, Winnipeg, and the Church of Saint John, Winnipeg, draped in mourning, on the occasion of the late Col. Kennedy's death. They are on view in THE EXAMINER office, and are well worth seeing.

Losses by Fire.

As carefully computed by that standard authority, the Chronicle fire tables, the fire losses of the United States and Canada in the month of July during the past ten years—1875-1884 inclusive—aggregated $67,574,540. This gives, as the average fire waste for the month of July for that period the sum of $6,750,000.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

The Daily Examiner.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1885.

Personal.

Mr. J. D. McIlmoyle and Mr. James Henry arrived in town yesterday, having returned from New York, where they have been spending their vacation.

Mr. John Corkery, of the firm of T. Dolan & Co., left yesterday for a three weeks' holiday tour, during which time he will visit New York, Boston and other cities in the eastern States.

Mr. John Craig, of the Fergus News Record, Mr. John Shaw, of the Elora Express, and Mr. W. G. Gow, of Fergus, called at the EXAMINER office to-day. They are en route for the back lakes, where they will meet Mr. Robert Craig and family, and other friends, with whom they will pass a few days in camp.

Civic Holiday.

The steamer Golden-Eye will run an excursion to Idyl Wild and Harwood on Monday, the Lacrosse Civic Holiday, and on Tuesday, the Firemen's Civic Holiday, to enable all parties to enjoy a pleasant sail on Rice Lake. She will leave the wharf at 7.30 a. m., and return at 7.30 p. m. Round tickets, 50c.; to Faucher's Park, 25c. R. W. Carson, Master.

Riverside Park.

Arrangements have been made for a big day on Tuesday. The Riverside Lacrosse Club will meet the Norwood Club on the Park. Foot races, jumping and other sports will be a great feature of the day. The Norwood club will be accompanied by their splendid band, led by our old townsman, Archie Freeman. There will also be on the ground the bagpipes and the Italian harpers. Entrance 15 cents.

Monday's Teams.

The following are the names of the team which will play in the competition for the Ed. Brown Cup on Monday:—J. Joyal, M. Tierney, P. Myles, M. Halpin, J. Henderson, R. Kelly, W. Rudkins, C. Rutherford, R. H. Fortye, G. Giroux, A. Rose. It will be seen by the above list of names that nearly all of the "old timers" are on, and are likely to make a good reach for the cup, against any visiting team. The Shamrock and Ontario teams, to face each other on Monday, are as follows:—Shamrocks—Prior, McKay, Daly, McGuire, Butler, Hart, Trihey, Hamilton, Ahearn, Devine, Green, Cregan, Barrie. Ontarios—Clewes, Clark, Small, Hull, Ryan, McPherson, Crown, Wilson, Foley, Gerry, O'Neil, Martin, Cheyne. Nobody should fail to see this contest. It will be the first, and perhaps the last appearance of the champions in Peterborough, and the occasion should not fail to be improved. At the Driving Park lacrosse grounds. Ball to be faced at 2:30 p. m.

A party of surveyors are at present engaged in making a survey of Lake Buckhorn. They are in the Dominion service, and will probably continue their duties on Pigeon Lake. They are camped at Oak Orchard, and are enjoying themselves as well as is possible, when the festive mosquito is bent on business.

The Pigeon Lake Quarry has nearly completed its work for the Fenelon locks. A swing has to be placed in the Victoria Railway bridge, and negotiations are pending for the work being performed by Mr. Macdonald. If these negotiations are closed, Mr. Macdonald will get the stone from Pigeon Lake. If not the operations at the quarry will probably be suspended next week.

Another drive of logs has arrived at the head of the island. It contains about 14,000 and is the property of Mr. J. M. Irwin. J. Montgomery is the boss and considering that he has brought the drive from the township of Eyre, has made fair time. The drive was caught out in the middle of Sturgeon Lake by the storm on Monday, and had an exciting time. It struck them right in the teeth, and they had to trust to their anchor. If the anchor cable broke they would have been driven back, and lost several days, and as it was they were threatened with a break of the boom and scattering of the logs over the lake. They weathered the gale safely but it was all they could do. —Independent.

How They Squirm!

It is a source of satisfaction to Grip to know that the thick-skinned beings, to whose backs he has sometimes to apply the lash, are not insensible to their punishment. The Mail winces under the cartoon that Grip devoted to the Dominion printing jobbery, and, after a few weeks of solemn reflection, it attempts to break the effect of the blow by endeavoring to make out that Grip's relations to the Ontario Government printing are of the same character as those existing between the Dominion Government and the journals named in the public accounts as enjoying illicit printing orders. Everybody (including the Mail) knows that the position of the Grip Printing Co. is, on the contrary, precisely the same as that of Messrs. Maclean, Roger & Co., the Ottawa contractors, and just the opposite of the jobbers it would fain defend. Every atom of printing done by the Grip Co. for the Ontario Government is paid for upon the basis of the tender, regularly sent in and awarded, according to law, to the lowest tenderer. In the case of the Mail's virtuous clients, the charges were in every case exorbitant, but even if they had not been so, the work was illegal, belonging rightfully to the regular contractors. Marvellous and incredible as it will no doubt appear to the Mail management, we have only further to say that Grip is conducted by its editor without reference to its printing department.

Explosive Seeds and Trees.

"Speaking about dynamiters," said a naturalist, "I have brought a few specimens to illustrate that feature in low life—as there are dynamiters in the lower animal kingdom as well as in the higher, and, curiously enough, we might say the same of the vegetable kingdom. I remember a few years ago I was traveling on a small vessel between some of the West India Islands, and at one place had purchased a number of curious seeds, placing them under my berth for safe-keeping. I was sitting at the small table, hanging on with both hands, in company with a negro passenger, when there came an explosion that sounded as if a barrel of powder had gone off. Something whizzed by my face so closely that I felt the wind, and another projectile struck me full in the breast. The negro was not so fortunate. He uttered a loud yell as the sound came, threw up his hands, and, with the blood spurting from his face, went over backward with a crash that brought the skipper and crew down the hatch in a hurry. We picked him up, and first he swore that I had shot him, and then that I had hit him with a club, but in a moment he recovered from his fright and we began to investigate.

"The man had been struck fairly in the nose—a blow so powerful that it was several hours before the hemorrhage could be stopped. When I rose from my seat something dropped upon the cabin floor, and I afterward picked it up; and what do you suppose it was? Nothing but a section of one of the seeds, and they were the explosives. The heat of the cabin had in some way affected them so that they went off like cartridges, and, as each was made up of several pieces, it had somewhat the effect of grape-shot. One struck the negro as related, another missed my head and shattered a looking-glass behind me, another struck me in the chest, while still another, curiously enough, took off the handle of a pitcher, or monkey cooler, that stood on the table. Four of the seeds didn't go off, and you may be sure I put them in a strong box. A number of seeds," continued the speaker, "have a similar habit of exploding, and it is generally a provision connected with the dispersal of seeds. In the West I have seen trees explode with a report that could be heard nearly a mile; in this case the frost was the cause. There certain insects bore great holes in the bark of trees, rain finds its way in and freezes, and away goes the tree as if you had placed a torpedo in it, showing what the expansive power of water will do."—Philadelphia Times.

He rang the door bell of a house on Cass avenue and when the owner himself opened the door handed him a sealed envelope.

"Recipe for the cholera," he said in a brisk jerky voice, "only 25 cents."

"But, my dear sir, I don't want it," said the citizen drawing back. "I haven't any use for it. Cholera is something we never indulge in."

"Take it and I'll throw in the celebrated treatise by the great Dr. O——, 'How the Cholera Travels,' in book form."

"My friend," said the Cass avenue man, gently but firmly, "I don't care a continental how the cholera travels—whether it is in book form, on a steam yacht, or in a palace car. What I particularly desire just now is to see you travel; ta-ta."

The agent took the hint and his departure at the same moment.—Detroit Free Press.

A Druggist's Observations.

Remarked a Wabasha street druggist: "I have seen it stated in an eastern newspaper that licoric chewing has become a favorite custom among the ladies; that they are in the habit of buying it by the $5 package, and that the champions among the female chewers eat up one of these big bundles in about two weeks. Now, if there is any such craze as that, it hasn't struck this section of the country yet, and I've seen nothing to indicate that we are threatened with a licorice craze. As to $5 packages, there are none. The licorice root comes in bundles of ten pounds each, and the wholesale price is $1 20. We never sold a whole package to anybody. No, sir, my experience is that that sort of a thing is on the decrease instead of on the increase. School-children chew licorice and slippery elm because those things are sweet, and they vary the monotony of their mastication with chewing gum. It is rarely you will see a woman chewing, although some of them do take to licorice occasionally.

As a matter of fact, however, we have had no run on such things for ten years, and I suppose the reason there is less demand for licorice root, slippery elm, and gum now than there was then is that nearly all the druggists have added candies to their stock in trade. People come in and instead of buying something to chew on get candy. They think they obtain a better quality at a drug-store than they could get at an ordinary candy-shop. Although I am in the business myself, I am free to state that that is a mistaken one. We sell the best candies, but the best candies are obtainable at any first-class candy-shop. Speaking of things to chew, I've known people to masticate tolu gum. Now that's hard stuff to chew, because it sticks to the jaws, and once in the mouth is difficult to get out again. It gives a person a sort of a lock-jaw. We tell people about that when they call for the gum; but some of them, if they happen to be a little pig-headed, won't believe us, and insist on having the gum. The next we hear from them is that they come around and give us a good blowing up for selling them the article, claiming it was not of the right kind. But tolu is now made up into a kind of taffy by mixing it with other things, and in that form can be chewed, and is pleasant to the the taste.

"We sell some taffy tolu, but down south there is a rage for it. A gentleman from Louisville told me that in that city every other person one meets on the street is chewing the gum. It is sold by all sorts of dealers, and even the newsboys and bootblacks do a thriving business peddling it out. Well, there's no craze for licorice root, but down there there seems to be one for tolu. As we are speaking of crazes, let me tell you of a very amusing craze that developed right here in St. Paul in 1869. Nearly all the druggists keep a little gum benzoin on hand. At the store where I was then employed we had about ten pounds. There was ordinarily very little call for the article, but all of a sudden there sprang up a great demand for gum benzoin. Ladies fairly poured into the store, each to order one ounce of gum benzoin and half a pint of whisky. Druggists in various parts of the city sent around to us for supplies. We didn't know what to make of it. The ten pounds soon gave out, and we had to telegraph east for more. Inside of a month, I presume, at least five hundred pounds of gum benzoin were sold to the ladies of this city. Then the craze let up nearly as suddenly as it came on. When we got at the bottom facts in the matter we found that there had been a woman here from the east, lecturing to females only, and she had recommended a mixture of gum benzoin, whisky, and water for the complexion."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

A Battle of Ants.

A number of persons were standing in front of the City Hall, Denver, the other afternoon. A large number of ants were noticed running about on the steps and ground, constantly augmented by numbers from unknown quarters. Examination revealed the fact that the ants were winged and were tumbling from the air. Further investigation showed that the ants were of two species, and that a battle begun in the air was raging on the ground. One of the species of the warring insects was large and red, with wings the size of a house fly; the other was a small red ant, with a black head and small wings. They were in superior numbers and attacked their enemies by twos, fours and scores. Several balls of the ferocious warriors when separated showed as many as thirty small ants on one large one. Here and there could be seen single combats, the small ants in every case victorious. Those that were clinched in the air remained clinched on the ground until one or the other was vanquished and dead.

But as a general thing they fell to the ground and at once prepared for battle. Each side was under leaders, who massed their forces and marched them with military precision upon the foe. Skirmish lines were thrown out. The lines advanced, retreated, advanced again, and then the battle became general. The rules of civilized warfare were observed for a while, but before the fight was over it was a go-as-you please affair. The small ants were in the majority but their opponents were giants compared with them and they crushed the pigmies in their strong mandibles as an alligator would a gnat.

For at least half an hour the battle raged. The ground was thick with the dead and the dying, the latter being dispatched wherever found. At last the giants were routed. They fled ignominiously, pursued by the pigmies, who slaughtered them by scores while in full retreat, some flying, others running to escape with their lives. The visitors acted as if they wanted to crow, and probably did, but if they made any noise the spectators were not aware of it, if the vanquished were.

A SUBJECT FOR INVESTIGATION.

Now that the Riel trial is over the government should turn its attention to the investigation of the gross corruption and stealing that characterized the transport service in the Northwest rebellion. The supplies were not only wasted in a most villianious manner, but the delay in the service retarded military operations and so prolonged the contest and added to the expense. The government are to blame that there was no check kept upon the teamsters. A teamster was paid by the ton, as weighed when starting, for drawing his load, and when he knew that a slovenly and indifferent government had made no arrangements for checking his load at its destination, he would naturally decrease his burden as the journey progressed. As a consequence the trails, leading to the "seat of war," all over the Northwest, were littered with supplies that had been pitched off to lighten the load of the contractor. Thus, the latter got paid for teaming goods he never delivered, and the supplies were wasted. It is no wonder that at this rate the expense of the rebellion is likely to amount to twice or thrice what it should have been. There is the most circumstantial proof of these allegations. Members of the Midland Battalion belonging to Company "G" assert that they didn't get more than half of the supplementary supplies forwarded them by the ladies of the town. The Government teamsters, owing to laxity of arrangement, were able to help themselves liberally to luxuries and necessaries for which our volunteers were actually suffering. The teamsters are not the only culprits; their offences are trifling compared to the wholesale robbery perpetrated by pets of the Government. The Bell Farm Company have a larger load of guilt to bear than any load of supplies their teams may have hauled at quadruple rates. And Lieut.-Governor Dewdney, whose appointment Sir John declared was the best he ever made, did not disdain to soil his deputy vice-regal fingers with picking the plums out of the Bell Farm transport pie. The information respecting these alleged frauds comes from a source not unfriendly to the Government. Nobody who knows the present government and the rapacious parasites that fatten on the people's money corruptly distributed, can doubt that there is truth in these charges, but a strict investigation should be made in order to arrive at the whole truth, to fix the guilt and award the punishment where it belongs. Transportation of both Government and understrappers would be a fitting punishment for transport frauds.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The responsibility for the "salary grab" rests with the Dominion cabinet, who proposed the increase in fulfilment of a promise to that effect made to their supporters, in case the latter would stay and vote the Franchise Bill through.

The dispute between the Ameer of Afghanistan and the Czar of Russia, in reference to the Zulficar Pass, is not yet settled. It would seem that the Russians agreed that this pass should remain in possession of the Afghans, but in such a manner as to make it practically valueless. Russia in disputing to retain the command of the heights which would control the pass, and secure an easy access to Herat. It is impossible, says the Advertiser, that the English Government should agree to such a construction of the understanding, as would, in fact, place the Afghans at the mercy of the Russians. It would seem that further discussion of the question is delayed until the proposed boundary is surveyed by the joint commissioners. Russia will wait her opportunity, and will continue to push forward her frontier until she reaches the borders of India and the Persian Gulf, unless she in the meantime meet with serious reverses

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Beauty and Magnificence of the Gates of Pearl.

The Gates Open for all True Believers Without Respect to Creeds.

Men of All Races, Climes and Nationalties Can Enter.

Text—Revelations xxi., 21: "And the twelve gates were twelve pearls."

Our subject speaks of a great metropolis the existence of which many have doubted. There has been a vast immigration into that city, but no emigration from it. "There is no such city," says the devout astronomer. "I have stood in high towers with a mighty telescope and have swept the heavens, and I have seen spots on the sun and caverns in the moon, but no towers have ever risen on my vision, no palaces, no temples, no shining streets, no massive wall. There is no such city." Even very good people tell me that heaven is not a material organism but a grand spiritual fact, and the Bible descriptions of it are in all cases to be taken figuratively. I bring in reply to this what Christ said, and He ought to know: "Go to prepare"—not a theory, not a principle, not a sentiment—but "go to prepare a place for you." The resurrected body implies this. If my foot is to be reformed from the dust it must have something to tread on. If my hand is to be reconstructed it must have something to handle. If my eye, having gone out in death is to be rekindled I must have something to gaze on. The adverse theory seems to imply that the resurrected body is to be hung on nothing or walk in air or to float amid the intangibles. You tell us that if there be material organisms then a soul will be cramped and hindered in its enjoyments; but I answer: Did not Adam and Eve have plenty of room in the garden of Eden? Although only a few yards or a few miles would have described the circumference of that place they had ample room. And do you not suppose that God in the immensities can build a place large enough to give the whole race room even though there be material organisms? Herschel looked into the heavens. As a Swiss guide puts his alpenstock between the glaciers and crosses over from crag to crag, so Herschel placed his telescope between the worlds and glided from star to star, until he could announce to us that we live in a part of the universe but sparsely strewn with worlds. And he peers out into immensity until he finds a region no larger than the solar system in which there are fifty thousand worlds moving. And Prof. Lang says that, by a philosophic reasoning, there must be somewhere a world where there is no darkness but everlasting sunshine; so that I do not know but that it is simply because we have no telescope powerful enough that we cannot see into the land where there is no darkness at all and catch a glimpse of the burnished pinnacles. As a conquering army marching on to take a city, comes at nightfall to the crest of a mountain from which in the midst of the landscape they can see the castles they are to capture, rein in their war-chargers and halt to take a good look before they pitch their tents for the night, so now, coming as we do on this mounta n-top of prospect, I command the regiment of God to rein in their thoughts and halt, and before they pitch their tents for the night, take one good look at the gates of the great city. "And the twelve gates were twelve pearls."

In the first place, I want you to examine the architecture of those gates. Proprietors of large estates are very apt to have an ornamented gateway. Sometimes they spring an arch of masonry the posts of the gates flanked with lions in statuary; the bronze gate is a representation of intertwining foliage, bird haunted, until the hand of architectural genius drops exhausted all its life into the stone. Babylon had a hundred gates, so had Thebes. Gates of wood and iron and stone guarded nearly all the old cities. There have been a great many fine gateways, but Christ sets hand to the work and for the upper city he swung a gate such as no eye ever gazed on untouched of inspiration. With the nail of His own cross He cut into it wonderful traceries, stories of past suffering and of gladness to come. There is no wood or stone or bronze in that gate, but from top to base and from side to side it is all of pearl. Not one piece picked up from Ceylon banks and another piece from the Persian Gulf and another piece from the Island of Margarette; but one solid pearl picked up from the beach of everlasting light by heavenly hands and hoisted and swung amid the shouting of angels. The glories of the alabaster vase and the porphry pillar faded out before this gateway. It puts out the spark of feldspar and Bohemian diamonds. You know how one little precious stone on your finger will flash under the gaslight. But, oh, the brightness when the great gate of Heaven swings, struck through and dripping with the light of eternal noonday. Julius Cæsar paid 125,000 crowns for one pearl. The Government of Portugal boasted of having a pearl larger than a pear. Cleopatra and Philip II., dazzled the world's vision with precious stones. But gather all these together and lift them, and add to them all the wealth of the pearl fisheries and set them in the panel of one door and it does not equal this

MAGNIFICENT GATEWAY.

An Almighty hand hewed this, swung this, polished this. Against this gateway on the one side dashed all the splendors of earthly beauty. Against this gateway on the other side beat the surges of eternal glory. Oh, the gate, the gate! It strikes an infinite charm through every one that passes it. One step this side that gate and we are paupers. One step the other side that gate and we are kings. The pilgrim of earth going through sees in the one huge pearl all his earthly tears in crystal. Oh, gate of light, gate of pearl, gate of heaven! For our weary souls at last swing open. Heaven is not a dull place, a contracted place, a stupid place! "I saw twelve gates and they were twelve pearls."

In the second place I want you to count the number of those gates. Imperial parks and lofty manors are apt to have one extensive gateway, the others are ordinary; but look around at these entrances to heaven and count them. Twelve gates! I admit this is rather hard on sharp sectarians. Here is a bigoted Presbyterian who brings his Westminster assembly catechism and he makes a gateway out of that and he says to the world, "You go through these or stay out." And here is a bigoted member of the Reformed church and he makes a gateway out of the Heidelberg catechism and he says, "You go through there or stay out." And here is a bigoted Methodist and he plants two posts and he says, "Now you crowd in between these two posts or stay out." And here is a bigoted Episcopalian who says, "Here is a liturgy out of which I mean to make a gate; go through it or stay out." And here is a Baptist who says, "Here is a water gate; you go through that or stay out." And so on in all our churches and in all our denominations there are men who make one gate for themselves and then demand that the whole world go through it. I abhor this contractedness in religious views. Oh! small-souled man, when did God give you the contract for making gates? I tell you plainly that I will not go in at that gate. I will go in at any one of the twelve gates I choose. Here is a man who says: "I can more easily and closely approach my God through a prayer-book." I say, "My brother, then use the prayer-book." Here is a man who says, "I believe there is only one mode of baptism, and that is immersion." Then I say, "Let me plunge you." Anyhow, I say, away with the gate of rough panel and rotten posts and rusted latch when there are twelve gates and they are twelve pearls. The fact is that a great many of the churches in this day are being doctrined to death. They have been trying for thirty years to find out all about God's decrees, and they want to know who are elected to be saved and who are reprobated to be damned, and they are keeping on discussing that subject when there are millions of souls who need to have the truth put straight at them, that unless they repent they will be teeth in the jawbone with which they are to slay the Philistines, when they ought to be wielding skilfully the weapon. They sit on the beach and see a vessel going to pieces in the offing, and instead of getting into a boat and pulling away for the wreck they sit discussing the different styles of oar-locks. God intended us to know some things and intended us not to know others. I have heard scores of sermons explanatory of God's decrees, but came away more perplexed than when I went. The only result of such discussion is a great fog. Here are two truths which are to conquer the world: Man, a sinner; Christ, a saviour. Any man who adopts these two theories in his religious belief shall have my right hand in warm grip of Christian brotherhood.

A man comes down to a river in time of freshet. He wants to get across. He has to swim. What does he do? The first thing is to put off his heavy apparel and drop everything he has in his hands.

HE MUST GO EMPTY-HANDED.

if he is going to the other bank. And I tell you when we have come down to the river of death and find it swift and raging we will have to put off all our sectarianism and lay down all our lumbersome creeds and empty-handed put out for the other shore. "What," say you, "would you resolve all the Christian church into one kind of church? Would you make all Christendom worship in the same way by the same forms?" Oh, no; you might as well decide that all the people shall eat the same food without reference to appetite or wear the same kind of apparel without reference to the shape of their body. Your ancestry, your temperament, your surroundings will decide whether you go to this or that church and adopt this or that church policy. One church will best get one man to Heaven and another church another man. I am not opposed to fences being built around denominations of Christians. I am not opposed to a very high fence being built around each of the denominations of Christians; but I do say that in every fence there ought to be bars that you can let down and a gate that you can swing open. Go home therefore, and take your Bible and get down on your knees before God and make your own creed. I am not opposed to creeds; I believe in them; but a creed that does not reach down to a man's immortal nature is not worth the paper that it is printed on.

I do not care which one of the gates you go through if you only go through one of the 12 gates that Jesus lifted. Well, now I see all the redeemed of earth coming up towards Heaven. Do you think they will get in? Yes, Gate the first; the Moravians come up; they believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, they pass through. Gate the second; the Quakers come up, they have trusted in the Lord; they pass through. Gate the third; the Lutherans come up; they had a great admiration for the reformer and they pass through. Gate the fourth; the Roman Catholic come up; believing in salvation by Jesus Christ they pass through. Gate the fifth; the German Reformed Church passes through. Gate the sixth; the Congregationalists pass through. Gate the seventh, the Baptists pass through. Gate the eighth, the Episcopalians pass through. Gate the ninth, the Sabbatarians pass through. Gate the tenth, the Methodists pass through. Gate the eleventh, the Reformed Dutch Church passes through. Gate the twelfth, the Presbyterians pass through. But there are a great host of other denominations who must come in, and great multitudes who connected themselves with no visible church, but felt the power of godliness in their heart and showed it in their life; where is their gate? Will you shut all this remaining host out of the city? No. They may come in at our gate. Hosts of God, if you cannot get admission through any other entrance come in at the twelfth gate. Now they mingle before the throne looking out on the one hundred and forty-four thousand, and you cannot tell at what gate they came in, One Lord. One faith. One Baptism. One glassy sea. One doxology. One triumph. Glory be to God, one heaven but twelve gates.

In the third place, notice the points of the compass to which these gates look. They are not on one side, or on two sides, or on three sides, but on four sides. This is no fancy of mine, but a distinct announcement. "On the north three gates, on the south three gates, on the east three gates, on the west three gates." What does this mean? Why, it means that and it does not make any difference from what quarter of the earth a man comes up; if his heart is right there is a gate open before him. On the north three gates that means mercy for Lapland and Siberia and Norway and Sweden. On the south three gates—that means pardon for Hindostan and Algiers and Ethiopia. On the east three gates—that means salvation for China and Japan and Borneo. On the west three gates—that means redemption for America. It does not make any difference how dark-skinned or pale-faced men may be they will find a gate right before them. Those plucked bananas under a tropical sun. Those, behind reindeer shot across Russian snows. From Mexican plateau, from Roman campagna, from Chinese tea-field, from Holland dike, from Scotch highlands they come, they come. Heaven is not a monopoly for a few precious souls. It is not a Windsor Castle built only for royal families. It is not a small town with a small population, but John saw it, and he noticed that an angel was measuring it, and he measured it this way and then measured it that way, and whichever way he measured it it was 1,500 miles; so that Babylon and Thebes and Tyre and Nineveh and St. Petersburg and Canton and Pekin and Paris and London and New York and all the dead cities of the past and all the living cities of the present added together would not reach the census of that great metropolis. Walking along the street you can, by the contour of the dress or the face, guess where a man comes from. You say: "That is a Frenchman, that is a Norwegian, that is an American." But the gates that gather in the righteous will bring them irrespective of nationality. Foreigners sometimes get homesick. Some of the tenderest and most pathetic stories have been told of those who left their native clime and longed for it until they died. But the Swiss coming to the high residence of heaven will not long any more for the Alps standing in the eternal hills. The Russian will not long any more for the luxuriant harvest fields be left, now that he hears the hum and the rustle of the harvests of everlasting light. The royal ones from earth will not long to go back again to the earthly court, now that they stand in the palaces of the sun. Those who once lived among the groves of spice and orange will not long to return now that they stand under the trees of life that bear twelve manner of fruit. While I look an ever-increasing throng passes through the gates. They are going up from Senegambia, from Patagonia, from Madras, from Hong Kong. "What," you say, "do you introduce all the heathen into glory?" I tell you the fact is that the majority of those people in those climes die in infancy, and all the infants go straight into eternal life, and so the vast majority of those who die in China and India, the vast majority of those who die in Africa go straight into the sky; they die in infancy.

ALL NATIONALITIES ARE INCLUDED,

Tabernacle Sermons.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY GENERATIONS

have been born since the world was created, and so I estimate that there must be fifteen billion children in glory. If at a concert two thousand children sing your soul is in rapture within you. Oh, the transport when fifteen thousand million little ones stand up in white before the throne of God, their chanting drawing out all the stupendous harmonies of Dusseldorf and Leipsic and Boston. Pour in through the 12 gates, O ye redeemed! Banners lifted, rank after rank, saved battalion after saved battalion, until all the city of God shall hear the tramp, tramp. Crowd all the 12 gates. Room yet. Room on the thrones. Room in the mansions. Room on the river bank. Let the trumpet of invitation be sounded until all earth's mountains hear the shrill blast and the glens echo it. Shout it to the Laplander on his swift sled, halloo it to the Bedouin careering across the desert. News! News! Oh, glorious heaven and 12 gates to get into it! Hear it, O you thin-blooded nations of eternal winter! On the north three gates. Hear it, O you bronzed inhabitants panting under equatorial heats! On the south three gates. But I notice when John saw these gates they were open—wide open. They will not always be so. After a while heaven will have gathered up its intended population and the children of God will have come home. Every crown taken. Every harp struck. Every throne mounted! All the glories of the universe harvested in the great granary. And heaven being made up, of course the gates will be shut. Austria in and the first gate shut, Russia in and the second gate shut, Italy in and the third gate shut, Egypt in and the fourth gate shut, Spain in and the fifth gate shut, France in and the sixth gate shut, England in and the seventh gate shut, Norway in and the eighth gate shut, Switzerland in and the ninth gate shut, Hindostan in and the tenth gate shut, Siberia in and the eleventh gate shut, All the gates are closed but one' Now let America go in with all the islands of the sea and all the other nations that have called upon God. The captives all freed. The harvests all gathered. The nations all saved, The flashing splendor of this last pearl begins to move on its hinges. Let two mighty angels put their shoulders to the gate and heave it to with silvery clang. 'Tis done! The 12th gate is shut.

Once more, I want to show you the gatekeepers. There is one angel at each one of these gates. You say that is right. Of course it is. You know that no earthly palace, or castle, or fortress would be safe without by night and by day, and if there be no defences before heaven, and the doors set wide open with no one to guard them all the vicious of earth would go up after awhile and the abandoned of hell would go up after awhile, and heaven, instead of being a world of light and joy and peace and blessedness, would be a world of darkness and horror. So I am glad to say that, while these twelve gates stand open to let a great multitude in, there are twelve angels to keep some people out. Robespierre cannot go there, nor any of the debauched of earth who have not repented of their wickedness. If one of these nefarious men who despised God should come to the gate, one of the keepers would put his hand on his shoulder and push him into outer darkness. There is no place in that land for thieves and liars and defrauders, and all those who disgraced their race and fought against their God. If a miser should get in there, he would pull up the golden pavement. If a house-burner should get in there, he would set fire to the mansions. If a libertine should get in there, he would whisper his abominations, standing on the white coral of the sea beach. Only those who are blood-washed and prayer lipped will get through. O, my brother, if you should at last come up to one of the gates and try to pass through, and you had not a pass written by the crushed hand of the Son of God, the gatekeeper would with one glance wither you forever. There will be a password at the gate of Heaven. Do you know what that password is? Here comes a crowd of souls up to the gate, and they say, "Let me in, let me in! I was very useful on earth; I endowed colleges, I built churches, and was famous for my charities; and having done so many wonderful things for the world I come up to get my reward." A voice from within says, "I never knew you." Another great crowd comes up, and they try to get through. They say, "We were highly honored on earth, and the world bowed very lowly before us. We were honored on earth and now we come up to get our honors in heaven;" and a voice from within says "I never knew you." Another crowd advances and says, "We were very moral people on earth, very moral," indeed, and we come up to get appropriate recognition." A voice answers: "I never knew you." After awhile I see another throng approach the gates, and one seems to be spokesman for all the rest and he says: "Let me in. I was a wanderer from God. I deserve to die. I have come up to this place, not because I deserved it, but because I have heard that there is a saving power in the blood of Jesus." The gatekeeper says: "That is the password—Jesus! Jesus!" And they pass in and they surround the throne, and the cry is: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessings and honor and glory and power, world without end." I invite you into any one of the twelve gates. I tell you that unless your heart is changed by the grace of God you cannot enter in. Oh, when heaven is all full and when the troops of God shout, the castle taken, how grand it will be if you and I are among them! Blessed are they who enter in through the gates into the city.

A SENTRY PACING UP AND DOWN

Old Paunchous Pilot.

General Henry K. Oliver is celebrated almost as much for his wit as he is as a composer of church music. The General and a friend, who was a stranger in Boston, were walking down Washington street one afternoon when their attention was attracted to a very large man wearing a heavy blue overcoat, who was approaching. He was a man who, from his enormous proportions and great breadth of stomach, would have been noticed anywhere, and, moreover, there were traces of salt water about him.

"Who is that man?" inquired his friend of General Oliver.

"That man," said the General, assuming a very solemn look, "is 2,000 years old."

"You surely cannot mean that," said the other.

"I do," replied the General, "and his name is Paunchous Pilot."

The subject of the remark was one of the best known pilots in Boston.—Boston Evening Record.

BISMARCK'S HOME.

The Mecca of German Statesmen.

There is scarcely anything remarkable in the chancellor's house at Friedrichsruhe except its absolute plainness. Jewish plutocracy may gloat in displaying gorgeous tapestry and rare bric-a-brac, but Bismarck, after all, is only a poor man. His state appointment is not worth even £3,000; Schonhausen is valueless; Varzin does not yield much, and the estate of Friedrichsruhe, although estimated at £150,000, brings at the most £5,000. It is true that this is no reason why his walls should be whitewashed, why his furniture is of the simplest description, why his art treasures consist of comparatively worthless photographs and paintings of his daughter and his sons, of Moltke, of Cardinal Hohenlohe, of Thiers, of Beaconsfield, of Friedrichsruhe itself. Yet there are several objects of luxury and ease, and others of decidedly historic importance. There is the rich carpet, extending through hall and rooms; the number of chimneys, where, the whole winter through, fires burn perpetually, and an abundance of couches, sometimes two or three in one room. On the chimney-pieces are the bronze bust of Moltke, crowned with a huge laurel wreath, a plaster cast of Charlemagne, and a small copy of Schluter's Great Elector. The dining-room is adorned with the bronze statue of the Emperor, given by him to Bismarck in 1881. But particular mention is due to the bronze imitation of the Niederwald monument, which stands on a fine oak cupboard in the smoking-room. A leaflet is attached to it with the following words, written by the Emperor himself: "Christmas, 1883; the crowning-stone of your policy; a festival which was destined chiefly for you, and which you unhappily were not able to attend.—W."

Not less interesting as a historical curiosity is a small card table in the Prince's study. When folded up it presents on the top board a little inlaid brass plate, bearing the inscription: "On this table the preliminary peace between Germany and France was signed the 20th of February, 1871, at Versailles, Rue de Provence, No. 16." When opened there appears the central round of green cloth with the very candle spots of yore, when Bismarck and Favre put their names under the treaty. It wanted a good deal of diplomacy on the part of the chancellor to possess himself of it. His landlady of the Rue de Provence obstinately refused to part with it for any consideration of money until the prince at last called in a cabinet-maker, ordering him to make another table exactly similar to that one. When the twins were put side by side the landlady of course decided in favor of the better-looking of the two and allowed Bismarck to carry off the original one.

The prince's own room is not only one of the largest in the house, but everything it contains bears due proportion to the size of its inmate—the gigantic mahogany writing table, the huge inkstand, the militia of immense goose quills and large pencils. Even the far stretching view from the window is in harmony with the discursive mind of the man who is reclining on one of the couches, while giving ample scope to his thoughts. The guest rooms are situated on the first floor. It need scarcely be added that they are distinguished by comfort, ease, and luxury from the Spartan nakedness of the rest of the house. It bodes peace and friendship to the state whose representative is invited to Friedrichsruhe. Here Bismarck puts out the torch of hatred; for the host's duty he considers to be to cultivate under his own roof amity and good understanding. Prince Orloff and M. de Giers stayed there when the difficulties on the Balkan peninsula, between Russia and Austria, were made up. Again, the visit of Baron Courcel, the French ambassador, was the harbinger of the present entente between France and Germany. On the other hand, Lord Ampthill died without having ever seen the chancellor, at least for the last eight months of his life. The moral of this is, perhaps, that when Sir Edward Malet is on his way to Friedrichsruhe we may safely conclude that an anglo-German understanding with a liberal cabinet in Downing street is no longer a contradiction.—London World.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Prob's Weather Premises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Moderate to fresh east and north-east winds, fair weather, stationary, or slightly higher temperature.

The Lacrosse Tournament.

Mr. G. H. Giroux, secretary of the Lacrosse Club, has received a letter from the Ontarios stating their intention of leaving Toronto so as to arrive here on Sunday evening. They will thus be quite fresh and in good condition for the struggle on Monday. Both Shamrocks and Ontarios are evidently anxious to be at their best, and if the weather proves fine, there is a certainty of a magnificent day's sport.

The Red Paint Pot Again.

The hitherto well conducted citizens of our fair town seem to be suffering from some kind of an epidemic, painters' colic possibly, and the reprehensible practice of "painting the town red" seems to be on the increase. Following the sanguinary example set by the owners of the Stevenson block and Brodie's mills, a rich ruddy tint is now being imparted to Wilson's woollen mills. By and by perhaps the young men who periodically visit the town and sally forth intent on giving it a tinge of couleur de rose will see that they have been anticipated, and turn their attention is some other direction.

A Union Picnic.

The Sunday Schools of the Bridgenorth Methodist and Communication Line Baptist Churches held their annual picnics on Tuesday last on the co-operation plan. The two schools with the friends and teachers of the scholars uniting in a steamboat excursion from Bridgenorth to Oak Orchard. The party spent a very pleasant day as the latter point, taking dinner and tea there and indulging in a variety of games and pastimes. On board the boat, both going and returning, the time was very pleasantly passed in singing, an organ having been taken on the boat to accompany the singers. The idea of holding union picnics is a capital one, and calculated to bring about pleasant relations and a better understanding of each other in the rising generations of Baptists and disciples of Wesley.

McIntyre's Mares.

There was quite a little gathering of sportsmen and others at the Driving Park last evening to see the match race between J. E. McIntyre's two running mares, Nancy Lee and Graybird. W. McGregor, bartender at the Oriental, was up on Nancy Lee, while W. Ferguson warmed the pigskin on Graybird. The race was arranged to be half-mile heats, best two in three, and soon after seven o'clock the riders were in the saddle and ready to start. At the first attempt the horses did not get off well together, but made the round of the track. On nearing the gateway Graybird made a dash over to the outrails, threatening to crush her rider, Ferguson. Billy threw himself out of the saddle and fell right under the mare's feet, and every one present made sure that he would be seriously hurt; but she leaped lightly over him and came to a standstill a little further on while he sprang to his feet, covered with dust, but smiling and unhurt. He was soon astride again, and this time a capital start was effected. Graybird having the pole got a little ahead at the first turn, and maintaining her lead, if not increasing it, down the backstretch began to look like a winner. McGregor began to force Nancy Lee at the turn, and from that point the race home was a close one, but Graybird was equal to the emergency, and gallantly responding to Ferguson's call went under the wire about a neck ahead. The time was given as 1.01. The next heat was a repetition of the first, with the exception that the heat was, if anything, closer. Time, 1.04. The result of the trial was rather a surprise, Nancy Lee having been the favorite before the start.

"El Padre" Cigars.

Universally acknowledged to be the finest 10c. cigar manufactured. Don't be persuaded to take other brands. No chemicals or artificial flavourings used. 13d-25w-1y

A Deserving Project.

The Ladies of St. John's Congregation resident in the South Ward are taking the preliminary steps towards holding a bazaar and fancy fair, the proceeds of which are to be applied to the erection of a schoolroom in No. 1 Ward. The object is a good one, and it is to be hoped their endeavors will be crowned with success.

Riverside Lacrosse.

The following are the names of the local team, to cross sticks with the Norwoods on the Riverside Park on Tuesday afternoon:—Messrs. A. B. Mercier, M. Higgins, Harry Neil, J. Carveth, S. Heap, W. Patterson, — Packenham, Jos. Gilman, Jos. Baguely, Wm. Giroux, town; P. Moscrip, town; Joseph Phalen, town. Felix Fraimer, spare man.

Final Warning.

Do not forget the excursion to Belleville on Monday next. Tickets, costing $1, are on sale at the bookstores. The train leaves Peterborough at 7.30 a.m., and parties who desire it can either return the same day or wait over until Tuesday evening. No delay; no disappointments, come and join the crowd. All who wish can have a sail on the Bay of Quinte to Massassaga Park, four miles from Belleville. Get your tickets to-night.

Lifting a Locomotive.

Engine No. 635, which, on Saturday last, forsook the track and embedded itself in a swamp near Keene, has not yet been extricated from the mud bath in which it has been cooling off. The ground in the vicinity is so soft and treacherous that it has been found necessary to erect a platform from which to work the lifting apparatus, and the foundations of this are now being put in.

The Market.

The attendance at the market to-day was somewhat larger than last Saturday. An enterprising fakir has taken up his position and is proclaiming in stentorian tones the many virtues of his large variety of compounds, calculated to kill corns, cure toothache, sharpen razors and bleed the pockets of the gullible. Potatoes and beans were selling at 20c., eggs were quoted at 12c., berries could be purchased at 75c., and butter at 20c. per pound. Chickens were selling at 50c.

The Water By-Law.

On Monday the vote will be taken on the by-law providing for the extension of the water mains, and the establishing of additional hydrants at different points, to afford more efficient protection from fire. The by-law providing for the use of the new town offices for corporation purposes will also be voted on, on that day. The matter of fire protection is one that every citizen is interested in, and there should be a large vote polled on Monday.

We Have Had Music.

Owing to the want of light and suitable accommodation in the Court House Park the Fire Brigade Band are unable to play there as they and the townspeople desire, but they, last evening, gave a concert on George street in front of the C. P. R. ticket office, the electric light at that point serving their purpose. The pleasant, cool evening and the excellent selection of music discoursed by the band attracted large numbers of citizens to the spot, and George street presented an unusually lively appearance. The band, led by Mr. F. W. Millar, played the following selection:

Quickstep	Queen of the Fete
Quadrille	Majestic
Fantasia	La Passirelle
Valse	Dear Old Friends
Fantasia	Emira

A Malicious Act.

Mr. William M. Fair, an extensive farmer and stock raiser residing near Millbrook, in Cavan township, has been subjected to much annoyance lately by some unknown persons who have maliciously tampered with his reaper. At noon yesterday the machine, which was in excellent working order at the time, was left in the field while the workmen went to dinner. On their return they found that it had been tampered with and some of the parts removed, leaving it in such a state that they were unable to proceed with the work until it had been fixed, although some sixty acres of barley were waiting to be cut. This is the third time the same thing has happened. Mr. Fair is not aware of having any enemies who would be likely to do such a thing, and is at a loss to imagine a motive that would lead anyone to injure him in this way. On Friday last there was a trial of rival machines on his farm, and at its conclusion he purchased the one that proved successful, and the idea is hinted in some quarters that this may have something to do with the matter.

The Hero of Batoche.

General Middleton passed through Peterborough this morning at 11.40 on the C. P. R. express on his way to Ottawa. The General, who is looking hearty and well, did not leave his seat in the train, and only a few spectators were at the station on the look-out for him.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.

Mr. Peck's Peccadilloes.

When George Peck gets full he is very foolish and sometimes brutal, so brutal that he frightens his wife out of her wits by making use of expressions, which though he may regard them merely as terms of endearment, frighten her almost to death He recently threatened that he would take her life, and Mr. Peck, thinking he might do so, resolved on curtailing his liberty. He was accordingly arrested yesterday afternoon [illegible] before Police Magistrate Dumble. That gentleman decided that the hot-headed husband must furnish substantial security for his own conduct and his wife's safety, and bound him over to keep the peace. One little obstacle, however, presented itself to this otherwise admirable course; no one was willing to be Mr. Peck's security. The difficulty was surmounted by Governor Nesbitt, who is willing to answer for Peck's conduct as long as he is a prisoner in the don jon keep of Castle Nesbitt. He will accordingly enjoy Mr. Nesbitt's hospitality until he succeeds in inspiring a less exacting confidence from some other citizen, or till the next assizes when he will be released.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

The monthly meeting of members will be held next Monday evening at eight o'clock. The Rev. Walter Roger, of London, Ont., will give an account of his training class there. All young men who would like to join the Association will be welcome. Music and refreshments.

The Y.M.C.A. training class commenced work last Thursday. It promises to be very beneficial to their works

Some of the ministers of the town will take part in the open air meetings, in Court House Park, on their return from vacation.

The young men's meeting will be held this evening at 8 o'clock, as usual. All young men are invited.

The Y.M.C.A. song service, held at 8:30 o'clock on Sunday evening, is very attractive. It is the only meeting held by the Association that is open to ladies.

The pleasant reading room and parlor of the Association are becoming more appreciated all the time. They form a very pleasant place in which to pass a leisure hour. Over 60 newspapers and periodicals are on file, of the best that are to be had.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

Peterborough Dry Goods Palace.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. are opening many new lines from Europe, much in demand and scarce at this season. Their stock is now very large and complete, comprising novelties, all kinds and qualities of dry goods, millinery, etc., at marvellously low prices. You can rely on getting a good assortment and most decided bargains at the "Golden Lion." They are clearing all remnants and summer goods in order to make room for their extended fall importations.

MONDAY, AUGUST 10, 1885.

The Departure of Messrs. Powell & Jones.

On Wednesday afternoon, says the Smith's Falls News, the firm of Powell & Jones finally severed their business connection with Smith's Falls, by their departure for their new home at Peterborough. It is a gratifying fact to note that the change in the firm's place of business is not in any degree caused by a want of success in this town, but is entirely the result of a most liberal offer from a number of capitalists in Peterborough, who have for a long period been desirous of starting a stove foundry there. During that period they have been on the look out all over Ontario for two men upon whom they could rely for the management of a large business. Their choice, after mature consideration, fell upon Messrs. Powell & Jones, of Smith's Falls. Overtures were made to these gentlemen, who, in their turn, had to give the matter grave thought, for they were conducting a business which, from the start, had been on the increase in every direction, and which gave certain promise for future enlargement. Finally, to the regret of every body, it was authoratively known that they would accept the offer from Peterborough. Their reasons for doing so are the best, and, while wishing them all kinds of success, we can congratulate the town of Peterborough with having secured as citizens two gentlemen eminently characterized by energy, geniality and integrity, and can express the conviction that the Powell & Jones Company will be managed in a manner calculated to secure to them ere long the position of being one of the largest stove manufactories in the Province.

On Thursday evening, 30th July, a few friends of Mr. and Mrs. Powell met at the residence of Mrs. Jason Gould, and in the course of the evening Mr. J. R. Lavell arose and, addressing Mr. and Mrs. Powell, expressed to them in a few words the regret with which the social world of Smith's Falls viewed their departure from our town, and while wishing them God-speed in their new home, hoped that no measure of success or prosperity would cause them to forget for a moment a place wherein they left so many friends. On behalf of those friends he begged their acceptance of a silver service which he trusted they would long be spared to use. Mr. Powell, in a feeling manner, expressed, on behalf of himself and Mrs. Powell, the deep appreciation they felt of the kind remarks of Mr. Lavell, and the gift accompanying them. It was not without sorrow that they had left a town where they had ever felt they possessed a host of warm friends, and he trusted that very often they would have the privilege of visiting Smith's Falls and renewing those associations which would always be to both of them happy memories.

When the constituency of East Durham was thrown open by the death of Colonel Williams, the Dominion Government issued the writ before the body of the late representative was buried. This indecent haste was shown, doubtless, because East Durham is a "safe" constituency, and it was thought well to have the election over and a supporter secured before the steadily waning popularity of the Government should reach that stage when even this safe riding could not be counted on. It is different in St. John's, N.B., whose seat is now vacant seven months—since the death of Hon. Isaac Burpee. Sir John does not feel certain that he can carry the seat, in fact he is extremely dubious; therefore the election is delayed, Sir John evidently hoping that some lucky chance will operate in his favor.

The New Minister.

Mr. Thos. White, of Montreal, having been taken into the Cabinet as the successor of Sir David Macpherson, the organs are of course loud in their praises. It may safely be assumed that they would be so, no matter who was appointed. We learn from the chief organ that Mr. White's appointment "strengthens the position of Ontario." It is difficult to understand how that can be. Mr. White was born and brought up in Montreal; and is now a resident of that city. For a few years he did live in this Province, but he is emphatically a Montreal man. It is true he represents in Parliament an Ontario constituency; but it is a Conservative riding, which is regarded as sure to elect the nominee of the party, whoever it might be. And when, after repeated attempts and failures to enter Parliament, Sir John sent him to Cardwell, the faithful in that constituency [illegible] Eventually Mr. White is from Ontario; actually he is from Quebec. His predecessor lived in Toronto, represented an Ontario constituency in the old Parliament of Canada, and was one of the Ontario contingent in the Senate. How Ontario can be strengthened by putting in his place one who resides in Quebec, and has all his interests in that province is not easy to comprehend. It is not much of a compliment to the Ontario Tories that Sir John had to look to Montreal for a man to represent them in the Cabinet. But Ontario Tories are very submissive, and they will keep their dissatisfaction to themselves.—London Advertiser.

The Toronto Industrial Fair.

It is now generally conceded that the great Industrial Fair which is held annually at Toronto takes rank as the largest and most important one held in Canada, offering as it does the the largest prize list in all departments and drawing its visitors from all classes of the community throughout the Dominion as as well as the adjoining States, and this has been accomplished without the aid of a dollar of Government money. The attendance last year was over 150,000, and already the appearances are that this number will be far exceeded at the coming Fair to be held at Toronto from the 9th to the 19th of September next, for which unusual preparations are being made. This Fair, after the great St. Louis Fair, ranks second to none in America, and its fame has spread to such an extent that delegates have been appointed to visit it this year from many of the large Fairs of the United States, even as far west as the State of Iowa. The entries and applications for space already made far exceed those of any previous year, and the managers are being put to their wits end to know how to provide for them all. The directors claim that the special attractions which they have secured for the coming exposition are far ahead of any previous one, and they are determined that the supremacy which their Fair has reached shall be maintained. Cheap rates and excursions will be given on all railways, and our readers will not be disappointed if they make up their minds to pay Toronto a visit at the time of the Fair. All entries must be made on or before the 22nd of August, and intending exhibitors should not fail to make a note of this fact. Prize lists and any other information can be procured by dropping a post-card to Mr. Hill, Secretary, at Toronto.

WEATHER NOTES FOR JULY.

During the former half of the month we had a moderate temperature, but daring the latter half we had a steady hot spell with occasional thunder showers. On several days the thermometer was rattling up at and about the nineties, but on the 30th at 3 p.m. it rose to 93° in the shade, and on the 31st to 91°, and on each day at sundown it stood at 80°; and on the 17th at sunset 82°, the highest attained this summer. The average temperature of the month was 65 8-31°. Rain fell on nine days to the depth of 2 inches and 66-100 of an inch. First fall wheat and barley cut on the 21st. The following is the different points from which the wind was blowing at sunrise with number of days, namely: north 5 days, north-west, 6 days, south-west 4 days, south 9 days, north-east 3 days, east 1 day, west 2 days, and south-east 1 day.

THE CROPS.

Hay, although only about 75 per cent of an average crop, was saved in good condition. Some of the fields were considerably affected with the fly, cutting the stock through at the upper joint of all. Wheat and barley is now busy cutting, with a good fair average crop of each. We cannot speak so hopefully of spring wheat; it was late in sowing, and the extreme heat during the latter half of July, and attack from the weevel have greatly changed our expectations. On high land it is ripening too quick. Peas is also affected the same with the heat. On high land oats will be a good average yield. Potatoes look well, only we had some hard fighting with our old enemy, the bug. Of other roots it would only be folly to attempt anything like a guess at them.

SUDDEN CHANGE.

Monday, August the 3rd, from 9 o'clock a.m. to midnight the there fell two inches and 28-100 of an inch of rain; and on the 6th, at sunrise we had a white frost, with the thermometer standing at 40°.

The Storm in Hastings.

The storm last Monday worked great mischief among the farmers. The ripening barley was beaten down flat upon the ground, so that in many instances it must be laboriously cut with a scythe, as a machine cannot be used. Corn was also broken down, and a large part of it will remain in that position. Cut hay was so thoroughly deluged as to require opening and turning before it could be drawn to the barn. The greatest damage, however, was done to the orchards. Fully half the apples were blown from the trees, and as the fruit is still in an immature state it is quite worthless for domestic use. Considerable cut barley was exposed, and this, of course, will be colored and rank as an inferior grade. Altogether the storm was one of the most destructive that has been experienced in this section for many years.—Intelligencer.

Gen. Grant in the Grave.

Impressive Ceremonies in New York and Elsewhere on Saturday.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Gen. Grant is forever at rest in Claremont. His heart-broken widow mourns at Mt. McGregor. The 8th day of August has been added to the list of historic days of this country. It has marked the closing scene in the mortal career of a hero who carved a world-wide reputation upon the field of battle.

To-day the great city gave up absolutely every other consideration except that of paying tribute to the memory of the fallen hero. The thought that ran through the minds of many found expression in the eloquent line, "It was his first surrender," which appeared in thousands of places throughout the city under every form of mourning adornment. Every avenue of trade was closed. The [illegible] and remote parts of the city and massed themselves along the weary miles of march. From the crowds massed solidly on both sides of the long ten miles the number of people who witnessed the pageant of 60,000 well disciplined men must have reached fully 3,000,000 along the line of the majestic march of Gen. Grant to his tomb. From earliest morning there was a crash of military music along the streets. Drums were beaten and bugles blown to the accompaniment of the tramp, tramp of many feet. The shrill notes of the fifes, the throb of the drums, the high notes of blaring bugles, the clash and crash of dashing, swinging military bands made a melody that stirred the heart of the most indifferent, and set the pulses throbbing in unison with the excitement of the preparation of the last march of the great soldier.

At 4.30 o'clock the funeral car with its guards came slowly across the bare, open space in Riverside Park to the temporary tomb. The slow advance of this car through a slight cloud of dust behind the slow advance of the guard of honor sent a thrill through the waiting audience. Who among those who heard the shrill call of the last "present arms" as the coffin was lowered to the tomb, will ever forget the emotion caused by the sight of the last movement of honor to the dead chief. The ceremonies here were brief and impressive. The bugle call at the close was the call to eternal sleep.

After this came the sharp rattle of musketry over the grave, and the eventful day's ceremony was at its end.

The number in line is estimated as follows:—Army and navy 1,500; other armed escort 1,200; in carriages 10,000; veterans and G. A. R., 20,000; civic division, 7,000; total, 39,700. Dr. Newman officiated at the tomb.

Memorial services were held at all the principal cities of the States. At St. Louis the horse Gen. Grant rode through numerous battles of the late war, was one of the features of the local pageant. The old charger saddled and bridled ready for field, was led behind the catafalque. Services were also held in Paris and London.

Anecdote of Justice Harlan.

The other day in the Circuit court-room a number of lawyers were discussing Gen. John M. Harlan, now a judge of the United States Supreme court.

"I was in his office a long time," said Mr. Charles Godshaw, trustee of the jury fund. "I was just beginning the practice of law then, and had not an office on my own account. I remember he opened my eyes when he charged a big fee for what then seemed little work. He was engaged in an important suit for one of the big New York insurance companies, and had to prepare his brief that night.

"He forgot it till about 8 o'clock that evening, when he came around and went to work with a hurry, as the brief had to be finished before morning. At his direction I got down a large number of law books and handed them [illegible] as he wished to consult authorities. He had hardly well begun when the door opened, and in walked the president of the company for whom he was preparing the suit.

"'I want to ask your advice about the wording of our policy,' he said.

"The general refused, saying he had no time.

"'It will only take you a few minutes,' urged his client, 'and it is all important that the matter receive immediate attention.'

"As he was not to be put off, the general asked him to state his point, but went on with his work. He hardly paused to hear the policy read, and without looking up from a book, told him to change about four words, as well as I can remember. His client thanked him and went out.

"A few days later Gen. Harlan told me to enter a charge on his books against the insurance company of $5,000 for advice, naming the day when the incident I have related occurred. I could scarcely believe my ears, and pretended to misunderstand the amount. He repeated it, however, and I entered the charge almost dumbfounded. Six months later he directed me to send the insurance company the bill for his services, including the $5,000 item for advice. I did so, and in a few days there came a check for the whole amount, accompanied by a most complimentary letter from the president, stating that the change he had suggested had been of the greatest value to them in their policies.

"Bear in mind that when he was consulted he was preparing a brief in a case of importance. Seemingly his attention was not distracted from that work, and I think I had a right to be astonished."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

DECIDED GRIEVANCES.

Though Hon. David Macpherson emphatically denied that Northwest settlers had any grievances whatever, the weight of evidence goes to show that this statement was prompted by "political exigencies." In addition to the mass of evidence already furnished, Mr. Miller, a pioneer settler of Prince Albert, submits to a correspondent of the Montreal Witness the following case, which is but a type of some two or three hundred cases in the same neighborhood. Mr. Miller says that the withholding of land patents when due is a grievance of many farmers, and Mr. Millar cites his personal experience. It will be 12 years on the 20th of this month since he arrived in Prince Albert—that is, before the land was surveyed. The survey was made and an agent appointed in 1878, but the Land Office was not opened until two or three years afterward. On applying to "enter" his farm at the office Mr. Miller was informed that the returns of the surveys were not yet in, and the entry consequently could not be made. Since that he applied every now and then, but always received the same excuse. In January of this year, when he had occupied his land for eleven years, he was informed that he could now make the entry. Even now he cannot get his patent until he has lived on his farm for three years after entry, the eleven years going for nothing in which has occupied the land, and been willing to enter it, but unable to do so on account of official delays. This single case does not fully describe the annoyance, worry and delay that have resulted through the carelessness and indifference of the government in its treatment of Northwest matters. Under such conditions it is remarkable that the loyalty of white settlers who have grown up in the enjoyment of civil rights, has stood the test, and that they have submitted quietly to such injustice and oppression. The half-breeds, incited by Riel, were not able to resist the temptation to strike for their rights, and it is not surprising that they felt themselves justified in breaking into open rebellion. The inference is irresistible that the blame of the whole uprising rests upon the government directly and solely. The government has professed to be so exceedingly anxious for the development and settlement of the Northwest, that they have felt warranted in bestowing millions upon millions of money upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate; but they have neglected the simplest acts of justice towards settlers, with this laudable object in view. When such damaging facts are elicited from private sources, what astounding revelations of government incapacity, neglect and oppression would be revealed if the government only dared submit the papers which would throw a full flood of light on the subject! The day will come when the enormities in connection with Northwest matters will be fully exposed.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hon. Ed. Blake left Toronto, Saturday morning for Murray Bay and will sail for England next week.

The Government have, it has been learned, under consideration the advisability of reorganizing the Mounted Police force on a different system of service than that which now exists. Instead of confining detachments in the different forts, regularly organized patrol parties, to cover large areas, will, it is thought, prove more effective.

House of Commons officials have petitioned for increased sessional indemnity, owing to the unusual length of last session. 'Twas ever thus. As the old cocks crow the young ones learn. No doubt the overworked (four hours a day) Government officials can make as good a case as the salary-grabbers. Money is no object so long as the office holders and other sharks demand it.

Mr. J. W. Jackson, of Fort Qu'Appelle and a member of the North-West Council, is in Ottawa city. He has business to transact in regard to certain North-West operations with the departments. Mr. Jackson says that the numerous bands of Indians in the vicinity of the fort have resumed their peaceful avocations, but the File Hill tribe, which gave great trouble during the spring, are still somewhat turbulent.

The East Durham Contest.

An Appeal to the Electors.

In view of the coming contest in East Durham, an address has been issued to the electors in pamphlet form, and owing to the contiguity of the riding, and the interest attached to the occasion, we re-produce it in these columns as below:

To the Electors of the East Riding of the County of Durham:

There is another matter to which I wish to call to your notice. No doubt many of you have heard of the exposures recently made by the Pall Mall Gazette, of London, of the immense traffic in young girls both in England and on the continent, but more specially in London. In England and in Canada there is, in this respect, one law for the rich and another law for the poor.

It is made a high crime to deal with a girl of the rich under sixteen years of age; but with the poor the age is reduced to eleven years. That is to say, if a rich man's daughter is tampered with while under sixteen, the man [illegible] no such protection for the daughters of the poor after they attain the age of eleven years. In 1284 the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland petitioned the British Parliament as follows: "That your memorialists anxiously desire that adequate measures should be adopted for the purpose of securing the better protection from licentious men and infamous persons, who make a trade in vice, and that this protection should be extended to those who are without property, parents or guardians, and to all girls under the age of, at least, eighteen years. The Montreal weekly Witness, a religious, and non political paper, of the date of July 29th, 1885, contains the following in reference to this subject: "It has been truly said of this law, the 32nd and 33rd, Victoria, chapter 20, sections 49, 56, Canada, that, under it, punishment is in inverse ratio to crime, and that protection is in inverse ratio to helplessness. Lechers may hire procurers, guardians may betray their trust, and still be within their legal rights. And, as regards protection, to take away a girl with expectations, (that is a girl of wealth) is a felony, if she is under twenty-one. To take away a girl without expectations, (that is a poor girl), is a misdemeanor, up to the age of sixteen. But for the girl who is without expectations, and without guardians, all protection ceases after she has turned out of her eleventh year. There is one law for the rich and guarded, and another, and a much weaker one for the poor and friendless. Our law makers, having first carefully protected their own daughters, and the daughters of the rich, deliberately left the orphaned daughters of the poor an open prey.

PARENTS MAY SELL THEIR CHILDREN,

IN THE FACE OF THIS LEGALIZED BUTCHERY,

and at a time when the whole civilized world is calling for the suppression of the vice traffic, and for the punishment of the traffickers, the Minister of Justice forces on a measure, which, instead of punishing the crime of procuration, legalizes it, and instead of protecting the orphaned children of the poor, carefully defines the conditions under which ruin may legally compassed. There is the poor, diseased, ruined child, and there is the criminal. But what of that. It is impossible to conceive or realize that condition of moral or mental obliquity under which the enactment of such a measure can be deemed just or lawful. However, one day last week, it was called up by the Secretary of State and forced through all its stages at a sitting, and without debate." Among those who voted against this law the Witness gives the name of Mr. Blake. Among those who voted for it the Witness gives the name of Sir John Macdonald. The most of you whom I now address are what is called in this most iniquitous law, poor people. I don't say poor men, because I want your wives and sisters and daughters to have something to say about this matter as well as the men. If the men are willing to condone this great wrong because of their political learnings and prejudices, I am quite sure the women will not do so. But I can't believe that the men of East Durham will be so lost to all sense of decency and justice as to be willing to sacrifice their daughter's honor for the sake of keeping Sir John Macdonald in power. They have not yet lost all natural feeling and all love and respect for their children, and I shall be greatly disappointed if the result of this election does not in this respect which they will not soon forget. Sir John may imagine that he is better than the common people, he may imagine that they have no self-respect and no feeling, he may imagine, because he is Sir John, that he honors the people by speaking to them, he may tell a well-to-do and respected farmer to leave in the sitting room of a hotel, because, as he said, Lady Macdonald was coming in; he may tell a respectable painter to stick to his paint pots and that he has no right to aspire to political or social elevation. But he will, nevertheless, find out that in Canada it is the people who rule and it is the people who have kept him in power so long, and that it is the people who will unmake him and send him about his business into private life. It can't be that you will be induced to return a man to support the present Government, and thus do all you can to perpetuate the present state of things. It can't be that for the simple sake of politics you will continue to burden yourselves with high taxation, and that you will support a Government which distinguishes between your daughters and their own, and that your daughters have no rights and no protection which they deem it worth while to respect. And if you do not guard them and see that they have equal protection under the law, how can you expect that others will do so? If the electors of the country would demand equality and justice, and declare that, in this fair Dominion, one man is as good as any other man, and that there shall be no privileged class here, and that a man, because he happens to be a mechanic or farmer, is not good enough to remain in a public parlour because lady so and so is about to enter it, if you put down your foot and said that such things should not be, and would take care to elect a candidate who also said they should not be, your power would then be felt and acknowledged and you yourselves be more thought of and respected, and your families would be more respected also.

TEACH THE PRESENT GOVERNMENT A LESSON

THE WHOLE BUSINESS LIES IN A NUT-SHELL.

You have the power in your own hands, and if you use that power in election times for your own benefit the Government, for the time being, would be compelled to do your will and treat you as respectable men ought to be treated.

There is one more subject, the Boundary question, which I wish to call your attention to before I close. You doubtless all know how hard Sir John worked to deprive this Province a territory in extent equal to a hundred thousand square miles, containing vast quantities of valuable timber and all kinds of mineral wealth, a territory, which, in years not far distant, will bring a large annual revenue to our local treasury. You know how hard the Provincial Government had to work to retain that territory. And doubtless many of you know what vast quantities of that timber was taken away by favorites of Sir John, as rewards for political services. And I regret very much to have to say that the late Col. Williams supported Sir John in his treatment of Ontario in this matter. Had Sir John succeeded this Province would have lost more than a hundred millions of dollars, and the political strength of Ontario would have been reduced one half. And in many other ways Sir John has shown his enmity to Ontario and its rights as a Province in the Confederation. Now, I want to ask you if you think it right to support and keep Sir John in power, when your doing so will enable him still further to injure you and your country, and I want to ask you if you can, conscientiously and as citizens of Ontario, send to Parliament a man whom you know will vote to keep Sir John in power. You may be politically friendly to him, but the question is, will you sacrifice your country to your political prejudices, or will you say, country first, country last and country always.

OF OVER HALF OF ITS TERRITORY,

When Advertising is Wanted.

There's nothing on earth so mysteriously funny as a newspaper advertisement. The prime, first, last, and all the time object of an advertisement is to draw custom. It is not, was not and never will be designed for any other human purpose. So the merchant waits till the busy season and his store is so full of customers that he can't get his hat off, and then he rushes to the newspapers and puts in his advertisement. When the dull season gets along, and there is no trade, and he wants to sell goods so bad he can't pay his rent, he takes out his advertisement. That is, some of them do, but occasionally a level-headed merchant puts in a bigger one and scoops all the business, while his neighbors are making mortgages to pay the gas bill. There are times when you couldn't stop people from buying everything in the store if you planted a cannon behind the door, and that's the time the advertisement is sent in on its holy mission. It makes light work for the advertisement, for a chalk sign on the sidewalk could do all that was needed and have half a holiday six days in the week, but who wants to favor an advertisement? They are built to do hard work, and should be sent out in the dull days when a customer has to be knocked down with hard facts and kicked insensible with bankrupt reductions and prices before he will spend a cent. That's the aim and end of an advertisement, and if you ever open a store, don't try to get them to come when they are already sticking out of the windows, but give them your advertisement right between the eyes in the dull season, and you will wax rich and own a fast horse, and perhaps be able to smoke a good cigar once or twice a week. Write this down where you'll fall over it every day. The time to draw business is when you want business, and not when you have more business than you can attend to already. —Bridgeport (Ct.) Post.

A story is told of a shrewish Scotchwoman who tried to wean her husband from the dram shop by employing her brother to act the part of a ghost, and frighten John on his way home. "Who are you said the guidman, as the apparition rose before him from behind a

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

Chapter V—Continued.

"I saw you arm in arm with him."

"Where, may I ask?"

"In Turin—last spring. Outside San Giovanni."

He looked at me attentively. "Yes, I remember your face now. You are one of those young men who insulted a lady, and whom I swore to chastise."

"No insult was meant, but even had it been so, it might be passed over now."

"No insult! I have killed a man for less than your friend said to me"

"Please remember I said nothing. But that matters little. It is on behalf of his niece, Pauline, that I wish to see Dr. Ceneri."

A look of utter astonishment spread over his face. "What have you to do with his niece?" he asked roughly.

"That is his business and mine. Now tell me where I can find him."

"What is your name?" he asked curtly.

"Gilbert Vaughan."

"What are you?"

"An English gentleman—nothing more."

He remained thoughtful for a few seconds. "I can take you to Ceneri," he said, "but first I must know what you want with him, and why you mention Pauline's name? The street is not the place to talk in—let us go elsewhere."

I led him to my hotel, to a room where we could talk at our ease.

"Now, Mr. Vaughan," he said, "answer my question, and I may see my way to helping you. What has Pauline March to do with the matter?"

"She is my wife—that is all."

He sprang to his feet—a fierce Italian oath hissed from his lips. His face was white with rage.

"Your wife!" he shouted. "You lie—I say you lie!"

I rose, furious as himself, but more collected.

"I told you, sir, that I am an English gentleman. Either you will apologize for your words or I will kick you out of the room."

He struggled with his passion and curbed it. "I apologize," he said. "I was wrong. Does Ceneri know it?" he asked sharply.

"Certainly; he was present when we were married."

His passion once more seemed upon the point of mastering him. "Traditore!" I heard him whisper fiercely to himself. "Ingannatore!" Then he turned to me with composed features.

"If so I have nothing more to do save to congratulate you, Mr. Vaughan. Your fortune is indeed enviable. Your wife is beautiful, and of course good. You will find her a charming companion."

I would have given much to know why the mention of my marriage should have sent him into such a storm of rage, but I would have given more to have been able to fulfil my threat of kicking him out. The intonation of his last words told me that Pauline's state of mind was well known to him. I could scarcely keep my hands off the fellow; but I was compelled to restrain my anger, as without his aid I could not find Ceneri. "Thank you," I said quietly, "now perhaps you will give me the information I want."

"You are not a very devoted bridegroom, Mr. Vaughan," said the fellow mockingly. "If Ceneri was at your wedding it could only have occurred a few days ago. It must be important business which tears you from the side of your bride."

"It is important business."

"Then I fear it must wait a few days. Ceneri is not in Geneva. But I have reason to think he may be here in about a week's time. I shall see him, and will tell him you are here."

"Let me know where to find him and I will call upon him. I must speak with him."

"I imagine that it will be as the doctor chooses. I can only make known your wishes to him."

He bowed and left me. I felt that even now it was doubtful whether I should succeed in obtaining the interview with the mysterious doctor. It depended entirely whether he chose to grant it. He might come to Geneva and go away again without my being any the wiser, unless his friend or himself sent me some communication.

I idled away a week, and then began to fear that Ceneri had made up his mind to keep out of my way. But it was not so. A letter came one morning. It contained a few words only. "You wish to see me. A carriage will call for you at eleven o'clock. M. C."

At eleven o'clock an ordinary hired conveyance drove up to the hotel. The driver inquired for Mr. Vaughan. I stepped in without a word, and was driven to a small house outside the town. Upon being shown into a room I found the doctor seated at a table covered with newspapers and letters. He rose, and shaking my hand begged me to be seated.

"You have come to Geneva to see me, I hear, Mr. Vaughan?"

"Yes. I wished to ask you some questions respecting my wife."

"I will answer all I can—but there are many I shall doubtless refuse to reply to. You remember my stipulation?"

"Yes, but why did you not make me aware of my wife's peculiar mental state?"

"You had seen her yourself several times. Her state was the same as when she first proved so attractive to you. I am sorry you should think yourself deceived."

"Why not have told me everything? Then I could have blamed no one."

"I had so many reasons, Mr. Vaughan. Pauline was a great responsibility on my shoulders. A great expense, for I am a poor man. And, after all, is the matter so very bad? She is beautiful, good and amiable. She will make you a loving wife."

"You wished to get rid of her, in fact."

"Scarcely that altogether. There are circumstances—I cannot explain them—which made me glad to marry her to an Englishman of good position."

"Without thinking what that man's feelings might be on finding the woman he loved little better than a child."

I felt indignant, and showed my feeling very plainly. Ceneri took little notice of my wrath. He remained perfectly calm.

"There is another point to be considered. Pauline's case is, in my opinion, far from being hopeless. Indeed, I have always looked upon marriage as greatly adding to the chance of her recovery. If her mind to a certain extent is wanting, I believe that, little by little, it may be built up again. Or it may return as suddenly as it left her."

My heart leaped at his words of hope. Cruelly as I felt I had been treated, too! that I had been made for this man's selfish ends, I was willing to accept the situation cheerfully if I had any hope [illegible]

"Will you give me all the particulars of my poor wife's state? I conclude she has not been always like this."

"Certainly not. Her case is most peculiar. Some years ago she received a great shock—sustained a sudden loss. The effect was to entirely blot out the past from her mind. She rose from her bed after some weeks' illness with her memory a complete blank. Places were forgotten—friends were strangers to her. Her mind might, as you say, have been the mind of a child. But a child's mind grows, and, if treated properly, so will hers."

"What was the cause of her illness—what shock?"

"That is one of the questions I cannot answer."

[To be Continued.]

CHIROGRAPHY.

A Hotel Clerk Says a Man's Handwriting Will Indicate His Position.

"How do you manage when assigning rooms to your guests to locate one on the fourth or fifth floor and the other on the second, when each pays the same rate per diem?" was asked the landlord of one of the hotels by a reporter a few days since.

"You had better ask one of the clerks," replied the boniface with a smile. "They know all about such things and will doubtless communicate the secret to you."

The reporter sought out the clerk and repeated the question. His reply was laconic and to the point:

"We size 'em up."

"But do you never make mistakes?" asked the reporter.

"Seldom," answered the clerk, and perceiving that the reporter would not be choked off, he continued: "One reason why we seldom make mistakes is that we can judge, in a measure, by the way a man registers of what he has been accustomed to at home. If a man will be contented with a small room in his own house, he is not likely to make any very decided objection to the same accommodation at a hotel. This is more especially true in the case of those who, like merchants from the interior, come to the city but once or twice a year to buy goods. They are too full of business to think much about the kind of a room they are occupying, and so long as they have a place to sleep, they don't care whether it is on the first floor or whether it is next the roof. Besides, they don't like to have any trouble. They would rather put up with a few inconveniences than raise a row. This is all the better for us, for we can save the best rooms for guests who will be willing to pay a higher figure. The successful hotel clerk is not only able to do this, but he can almost invariably tell at a glance just how much a man will stand, and he is very careful not to over-step the line. Again, look at the way some people register. The man who is unaccustomed to traveling and stopping at hotels picks up the pen as if he was afraid of it, and is singularly precise in the formation of the letters composing his name. He writes plain 'John Blank, Blanktown,' as nicely as he is able, and is perfectly satisfied if the clerk takes him by the hand and says, as clerks always do: 'Mr. Blank, I'm glad to see you.'

"The full-fledged drummer or tourist is easily identified. He will waltz up to the desk, dash off his name in a careless fashion, toss his overcoat and grip to the bell-boy, and try to talk to four or five people at once. He must have a fair room, or there will be trouble at the office. A young man on his first trip will demonstrate his Spencerian education; a country lawyer will write his name so that neither he nor anybody else can decipher the hieroglyphics, while the rural legislator will be anxious to let everybody know that he has the right to prefix honorable to his name. These characters are universal, and almost invariably we can get a man's character and position in the world by an inspection of his chirography.

"In small towns hotel clerks have a practice of giving the most desirable rooms to parties who claim to come from some large city, for the reason that they should have a better knowledge of hotel life than their rural brethren. Travelers are beginning to realize this, and will register as from New York or Boston, in order that they may get a good room, and they win the trick. The most essential thing in the make-up of a hotel clerk is to be able to fill the house from the top down, and at the same time make everyone believe that they are getting the best rooms."—Detroit Free Press.

Operations have commenced by which, at a cost of $1,250,000, New street station, Birmingham, England, will be converted into the largest railway depot in the world. It will cover a total area of forty-five thousand square yards, or over eleven acres, and will have three platforms each one thousand feet long.

Rufus Choate once chided his clerk for not charging a client more for a certain service rendered. "I took every penny the man had," was the meek answer. Then Choate ran his hands through his curly locks and said: "Young man, you did the best you could under the circumstances, and your conduct in the affair has been strictly professional."

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Prob's Weather Premises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—South-east and north-east winds, fine warm weather.

Important Notice.

We are glad to state that the committee having in charge the citizens excursion to Belleville, have arranged that the tickets shall be good for the Civic Holiday, to-morrow, August 11th. Return fare $100. Children half price. Tickets at the book-stores. Train leaves at 7.30 a.m., to-morrow. Come and see the fair City of the Bay.

Excursion to Belleville.

About two hundred persons from the town and Ashburnham left for Belleville this morning on the excursion that went on the regular Midland train to that city. The tickets hold good for two days and persons wishing to avail themselves of low fares to the Bay City on the Civic Holiday will have an opportunity of doing so.

The Rain.

The steady down-pour yesterday set the many persons interested in the Lacrosse Tournament at the lacrosse grounds anxiously speculating as to how is would turn out to-day. When shortly after the arrival of the Shamrocks the sky broke clear this morning many a sigh of relief was heaved, and the genial face of Harry LeBrun, that all yesterday wore an expression in keeping with the surrounding gloom, once more broke into its wonted sunshine of smiles.

The Cow By-Law.

We have received numerous complaints of the inroads made by vagrant cattle in contravention of the cow by-law. On Sunday a stray cow invaded the Court House Park, and utterly ignored the painted request "Please Keep off the Grass." About $500 has been spent in beautifying this delightful resort, and a cow, in half an hour, can undo the work of days and cause many dollars damage. It is certainly too bad that the cow by-law can't be properly enforced. It seems that the constabics who receive $50 a year for impounding stray cattle, decline to perform that duty on Sunday. On the same principle they are bound not to "see" two men fighting on the street on Sunday, even if they notice them. Some means should certainly be adopted whereby the cow by-law should be rigidly enforced.

An Enterprising and Popular Firm.

Messrs. Lockhart & Chowen, carriage builders, of George street, have just completed a very handsome canopy top phaeton for Mr. James Kendry. The carriage is finished throughout in the thorough manner for which all the work turned out by this firm is famous, the trimming being the work of Mr. John Marshall, and the painting of Mr. J. Gibbs; none but the very best material and workmanship have been put into it, and the finish is equal to any work of the kind done in Canada. This firm completed a similar vehicle, in which Mr. J. W. Flavelle now enjoys the luxury of riding, about two weeks ago, and as builders of this class of carriage they are deservedly popular. Messrs. Lockhart and Chowen are kept very busy in all the departments of their work, from heavy waggons to the finest carriage or buggies, and their reputation is as wide as the Dominion itself. They are shipping to Manitoba one of their famous Dexter Queen buggies which was ordered some time ago by a customer in that Province, and are doing a big business in that style of buggy and the Herbrand Drop Gear buggy, another of their specialties. Intending purchasers of carriages or buggies should see Messrs. Lookhart and Chowen before placing their order.

Bankers vs. Picked Eleven.

Notwithstanding the reinforcement of the Bankers' team by Norley, the club coach, they sustained a crushing defeat at the hands of the picked eleven from the club in the match played on Saturday afternoon. The club went first to the bat and were not retired until they had put together a total of 94 runs, 23 of which were credited to Strickland, 19 to Hamilton, and 14 to C. J. Logan. The bankers were disposed of for 52 runs, their top score being Cooper's 18, Lawford being second with 14. The following is the score:

Base Ball.

The members of the Uxbridge Baseball Club, who are playing a match on Riverside Park this afternoon with the Peterboroughs, arrived in town this morning and took up their quarters at the Kennedy House. The game promises to be a good one.

Lacrosse Garden Party.

The lacrosse tournament held this afternoon will be supplemented by a grand garden party to be given in the Murray Street School grounds this evening under the auspices of the home lacrosse club. Most elaborate preparations have been made for this event; the grounds will be brilliantly illuminated by electric light and Chinese lanterns, the City Band will discourse their sweetest music; seasonable refreshments wil be served up by the fair hands of the lady friends of lacrosse, and a choice programme of vocal and instrumental music will be rendered by a number of our local amateurs. The members of the Shamrock and Ontario Lacrosse Clubs have nearly all signified their intention of staying over for the party, and there will be such a gathering and fraternizing of lovers of lacrosse as was never before known in Peterborough. Tickets may be had from members of the club and at the grounds

The Lacrosse Players.

James O'Neil, J. O'Farrell and another member of the Ontario Lacrosse Club, arrived in town on Saturday evening, registering at the Oriental Hotel, and spending the Sunday in town. Last night the remainder of the players came in on the C. P. R. express, and joined the advance guard already installed at the hotel. They registered as follows: J. P. Denning, J. Clewes, D. Small, C. Clarke, Tom Crown, J. Burns, J. Bailey, C. Lennox, J. Wilson, E. Foley, D. McLean, and field captain Dan A. Rose. The Shamrocks, who arrived at 8:30 this morning, were met at the station by Mr. H. LeBrun, and a deputation of town lacrosse men, and, escorted by the City Band, rode up to the hotel in the omnibus. The players, who are accompanied by a number of friends, are as follows:—J. Prior, W. McKay, C. J. McGuire, D. McManus, D. Ahearn, T. Trihey, W. H. Hamilton, M. Cregan, J. Rowan, J. McManus, F. O'Reilly, P. Green, J. Barry, Wm. Ryan, (treasurer), and field captain M. J. Polan. The morning was spent by the two clubs in fraternizing with each other, and local lacrosse men.

Brobdignagian Boots.

The elephantine proportions of the only original John Smith's pantaloons have so long been familiar in Peterborough that they have ceased to excite surprise, but that impecunious individual has recently deposited with a venturesome local bootmaker plans and specifications for a pair of cowhides, the likes of which were never seen or even read of before save in "Gulliver's Travels." The dimensions of Mr. Smith's colossal understandings will be as follows:—Round the top of the leg, 23 inches; from the heel to the instep, 16½ inches; round the instep and under the foot 14½ inches; round the toes, 13⅞ inches, width across the bottom of sole, 6 inches. Of course it is not to be expected that any one person could undertake to pay the cost of such a gigantic contract, and it is understood that the Town Council, at whose expense Mr. Smith is being booted, are thinking of issuing debentures to raise the funds needed to carry out the huge project. By the way, while the Council are booting the original, would it not be as well if they booted him clean out of town? People here don't seem capable of appreciating the picturesque grandeur of his figure, and the fact that he occasionally solicits small loans (gratefully expended in quaffing the lenders' health), payment of which seems to be indefinitely deferred, has led many to think that "big pants" has had his day. When he gets the seven league boots he will be in fine condition for walking, and arrayed in them and his Dutch pants should be capable of making an imposing and dignified debut in any town that he decides to favor with his voluminous presence. Big pants must go.

Among the Lakes.

Mr. D. W. Dumble and family left for a visit to the back lakes, on Saturday, where they will spend the torrid term.

Lindsay Visitors.

A large number of Lindsay people came down to-day, to witness the baseball match. It seems easier to get the whole town down here than nine baseballists.

The Examiner's Holiday

To-morrow being Peterborough's Civic Holiday, there will be no issue of the DAILY EXAMINER, which takes this opportunity of wishing everybody a pleasant and successful day's recreation.

Y. M. C. A. Monthly Meeting.

Members of the Y. M. C. A. are reminded of the monthly meeting to be held this evening at 8 o'clock. Any young men who would like to join the Association are invited to be present. It will be a social meeting. An address will be given by the Rev. Walter Roger, of London, Ont.

Pall Mall Gazette Revelations.

Mr. W. H. Newett, Secretary of the Y. M.C.A., Manchester, England, will lecture on "Secret Sin and the Pall Mall Gazette," to men only, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Mr. Newett is founder of the Y. M. C. A. Social Purity Branch, and is well able to deal intelligently with his subjects. No boys under 14 will be admitted. The lecture is free, but there will be a silver collection.

From the City of the Bay.

About three car-loads of excursionists arrived in town this morning from Belleville and intermediate points on the Midland. They are enjoying the grand lacrosse tournament this afternoon. A statement, which appeared in a Belleville paper on Saturday, to the effect that the lacrosse tournament of to-day had been postponed till to morrow, had the effect of deterring many other Bellevillians from coming.

For the Falls.

It having been represented in certain quarters that the grand excursion under the auspices of the Peterborough Fire Brigade to-morrow only goes to Niagara, the management desire to state that the tickets take the excursionists right up to the famous Falls of Niagara. The train leaves at 6 sharp, and the band of the brigade will accompany the party and enliven the voyage across the lake, on the palace steamer Chicora, with choice selections of music.

The Lost Found.

A telegram from the local editor of the Ottawa Free Press was received by Chief Johnston this morning, stating that the former gentleman, while travelling east last night, had lost a Mackintosh coat, which he believed had been taken from the train by mistake at this point. The Chief at once instituted inquiries, which resulted in the coat being restored by a member of the Ontario lacrosse club, who had taken it in mistake for his own when leaving the train last night.

Water Works By-law.

The voting on the by-law for the establishment of a new set of hydrants took place to-day. Of course the result will not be known till the poll closes at 5 o'clock, but, unless the character of the voting changes before that time, it is probable the by-law will be carried. At about 2 o'clock No. 1 Ward vote stood 83 in favor of the by-law to 53 against, No. 3 Ward was a tie and No. 4 showed a majority in favor of the by-law. At 3 o'clock at the town hall No. 2 Ward had recorded 107 votes in favor of the by-law and 25 against.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 12, 1885.

MONDAY'S MERRYMAKING.

The Lacrosse Contest, Baseball Match and Garden Party.

The Champions Victorious.

An Evening of Mirth, Music and Song.

The breaking of the rather threatening clouds that overhung Peterborough on Monday morning and the burst of sunshine that followed were the signals for many to forget for the nonce the cares of business and abandon themselves for the day to the pursuit of pleasure. The martial strains of the City Band, as they escorted the visiting lacrosse players from the station, seemed to infect with the enthusiasm of their fellows those of the citizens, who had hitherto remained apathetic. The arrival, an hour later, of an excursion from Belleville, headed by another band, which paraded the streets, making them echo with brazen thunder, dissipated any lingering idea of drudgery that remained in the mind of the average citizen, so that by 2 o'clock, the time appointed for the lacrosse tournament, a large number of townspeople and visitors were wending their way to the Driving Park.

Shamrocks v. Ontarios.

The long anticipated lacrosse contest between the Shamrocks, present holders of the championship, and the Ontarios, who are among the aspirants to that honour, drew a very large concourse of lovers of lacrosse together to witness the match. The grand stand was well-filled, many ladies being among the occupants of seats, and a large general audience was assembled on the field. The Peterborough City Band was present and enlivened the intervals between the games with music, while the weather, breaking fine and warm, left nothing to be desired in the conditions under which the contest took place.

The match was prefaced by a long-throwing contest, as which a majority of the members of both clubs took part. It was finally won by Cregan, of the Shamrocks, who threw the ball 126 yards, 1 foot, 8 inches.

The players then took up their positions on the field and the ball was faced for

THE FIRST GAME.

The Shamrocks took possession of the rubber as it emerged from between the crosses, and an assault was at once made on the Ontarios' flags. It did not remain at their end long, however, the Ontarios working vigorously, and at last forcing the play up the field to the defence of the Shamrocks. After some skirmishing behind the flags the contest again was transferred to the Ontarios' end of the field. After making several trips up and down the field, neither team seeming to have much advantage of the other, an opening was at length given by the Ontario defence, who allowed themselves to be enticed too far from the flags. Green got the ball, and, taking advantage of the defenceless state of the Ontario citadel, made a dash and threw the ball between the poles just nine minutes after the commencement of the play.

During the interval between the first and second games the was run off. A number of men from the Ontarios and Shamrocks were entered, but either because their exertions in the field had told on them, or that the Peterborough men are the better stuff, none of the visitors showed to the fore, the honors being carried off by two local men, J. Calveth and A. Rose, who finished first and second respectively.

The ball was faced for

at six minutes to four o'clock, and proved to be almost a repetition of the former. The superiority of the Shamrocks, however, became more apparent, and although many attacks were made on their flags, the ball on one occasion actually striking one of their poles and rebounding; the general trend of the play was evidently adverse to the Torontonians, who began to show signs of demoralization. Several instances of good individual play by the Ontarios were noticeable, but there was a lack of cohesion among them which augured ill for their chances, and the anticipations of the spectators were no more than fulfilled, when Barry, taking the rubber from a throw of Cregans, scored the second goal for the redoubtable champions.—Time, six minutes.

A rest was now indulged in, advantage being taken of it to photograph the two teams.

THE THIRD GAME

was an entirely one sided one, the ball at once going down to the Toronto men's goal, and being kept in that vicinity with very brief respite. It never got higher up the field than centre, and even there could not find more than the most temporary resting place. The Ontarios were evidently rattled, and although they managed for a time to prevent the absolute capture of their goal it was apparent that they would ultimately have to again give way. The result was finally achieved by F. O Reilly, who made the fatal shot after the game had been in progress ten minutes.

The play, as a whole, was not equal to what might be expected from two such teams, though a very good exhibition of of the game. The Ontarios are evidently no match for the champions, for although they played a good game they lack that thorough sympathy and understanding of each other necessary to enable them to cope with such formidable opponents.

The Baseball Match.

The baseball match, in which the Peterboroughs contested for honors with a team from Uxbridge, resulted in a win for the former, who scored 16 runs to the visitors 13. As these figures would indicate, the fielding was not up to the mark on either sides, the high scores being rather the result of numerous errors than of heavy batting. O'Neill, of the home club, hit two double baggers and Campbell one. Pears, of the Uxbridges, was the only one of the visitors who made a two base hit. Fourteen of the home team and sixteen of the visitors struck out. Subjoined are the names of the players and the score by innings:—

The Garden Party.

The garden party held by the Lacrosse Club in the evening at the Murray Street School grounds was a thoroughgoing success in every particular. Shortly after 8 o'clock the City Band made the streets re-echo with their inspiring music, which was the signal for large numbers of ladies and gentlemen to make their way to the beautiful grounds on Murray street. Here everything was dazzlingly bright, the electric light, which had been provided for the occasion, almost putting to shame the softer illumination shed by the hundreds of that were suspended from every available point. A commodious platform had been erected in the centre of the grounds, from which proceeded the seductive strains of the Peterborough orchestra which had been engaged for the occasion. Throngs of ladies and gentlemen strolled hither and thither, chatting, flirting and enjoying the cool air of the evening, or stopping anon to refresh themselves with the tempting ice cream dispensed by the Misses Lee and Kennedy, who had kindly volunteered for this service. The vocal part of the entertainment was opened by Miss Begley who sang in her usual pleasing manner. A quartette, capitally rendered by Messrs. M. and T. Dunne, Tierney, and Elliot followed, Prof. Parker playing the accompaniment. The Misses Lech contributed a piano solo, Miss Annie Dunne a serio comic song, and the Dunne Brothers and Mr. Tierney a trio. The cup won by Mr. Cregan in the lacrosse ball throwing contest and the pins in the lacrosse tournament, were presented by Mr. H. S. Calcutt, the presentation being acknowledged on behalf of the Shamrocks in suitable terms, by Captain Polan, of that club, who paid a high tribute to the many excellent qualities of Mr. H. Lebrun, President of the C. L. A. Mr. James Sheehy and Mr. J. Carveth, the winners in the half and quarter mile races, were also presented with the handsome medals won by them. The party broke up shortly after ten o'clock, all expressing great satisfaction with their entertainment. Great credit is due to Messrs. Delaney, Lamay, Kelly and Rudkins for their indefatigable efforts in decorating and otherwise contributing to the success of the party.

Cricket.

The members of the Perth Cricket Club are taking advantage of the A. O. W. excursion from that place to Peterborough, and will play a match to-morrow afternoon with the home club, on the Athletic Association grounds in Ashburnham. The wickets will be pitched as soon as possible after the arrival of the visitors, at 12 o'clock, and as the Perth club have demonstrated their prowess by a series of victories over the Ottawa, Smith's Falls and other leading clubs, some first-class cricket may be looked for. Admission 15 cents.

Personal.

Mr. A. MacFarlane is at Hamilton attending the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., as delegate for Peterborough Lodge.

Mr. D. H. Moore is at the same place attending Grand Encampment I. O. O. F. as delegate for Mount Hebron Encampment.

Mr. Thomas McQueen, of the Toronto Telegram, passed through Peterborough on Monday. Tom has been camping at Stony Lake.

Mr. C. Gordon Richardson, the analytical chemist, and secretary of the Liberal Temperance Union, is stopping at the Oriental. He is here to organise a branch of the L. T. U.

Mr. Hugh Ross, late of the firm of Ross & Co., of this town, left on Monday evening for Montreal where he will start business in partnership with Mr. Charles Paisly, formerly with A. Mercer & Co., they having purchased the business of J. D. Anderson & Co., a firm of 37 years standing. Mr. Ross was some years in the employ of Mr. H. LeBrun and during that time became very popular in Peterborough. He afterwards removed to Belleville, returning again, however, to Peterborough. The many friends of Mr. Ross will send hearty good wishes after him, and as he and Mr. Paisley are both shrewd and practical men, and have taken hold of a reliable and well established business, there is no reason to doubt that the most sanguine hopes of their best friends will be more than fulfilled.

To-morrow's Lacrosse Team.

The following are the names of the first twelve which will compete against Brampton. The second twelve will be chosen to-night:—Stevenson, Joyal, Myles, Tierney, Halpin, Fortye, Sheehy, Kelly, Rutherford, Rudkins, Scott, Hall, and Coughlin, field captain.

Vandalism.

Some malicious miscreant has girdled a number of fine shade trees around the George Street Methodist Church, cutting so deep that the trees must die, and removing a band of bark 4 inches wide. Of all the fiendishly idiotic tricks to which humanity can stoop this tree girdling business is the most contemptible. It is to be hoped that the vandals who are guilty of it will be discovered, and that if brought up in court will not, as has too often been the case elsewhere, escape with a caution or a light fine.

Young Men for Canada.

Mr. Geo. E. Williams, Secretary of the Y. M.C.A., has handed in the following for publication:—"Mr. W. H. Newett, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of Manchester, Eng., is enjoying a trip through Ontario and the Northwest, and is especially interested in promoting the emigration to Canada of young Englishmen of the better class, who may obtain employment on farms and improve their condition. His objects are briefly stated as follows: 'My life has been spent among thousands of young men in Liverpool and Manchester, and I have found that many of them prefer, and are more fitted for a farming than a commercial life. It is time wasted for such young men to work five years as apprentices in offices, if they are eventually to become farmers in Canada, for they are only increasing the greatly overstocked clerk market at home, and not getting the right kind of experience for their after life. In the interests of such young men I have several times visited Canada, collecting the necessary information as to locality, demand for farm labor, &c., and arranged with reliable correspondents, who, like myself, have no self-interest in the matter, and who have previously found out by correspondence the farmers in their neighborhood needing help, are ready to receive and place out with these farmers the young men I send. Then there are many young men who, failing as clerks at home, wish to emigrate to find similar situations in Canada, and others whose idea of farming there is fishing and shooting. To all young men, and in my letters to the papers on this subject, I have been careful to point out that in Canada clerks are not wanted, nor intemperate, lazy young men, but that land being the one thing of which the supply greatly exceeds the demand, there are very fair prospects for young men of good characters, wishing and able to commence and stick to the hard work of farm life (as compared with their previous social state), to do what they are told, to learn what they can, in order, that by serving a farmer for a couple of years, they may gain the necessary experience for working their own land. Not being a land or emigration agent, having only future interests of young men at heart, and being thus careful to explain to suitable intend ingemigrants, young men brought up in comfortable homes, what farm life really is, and to keep unsuitable intending emigrants from going, I am pleased to say I have only known one to return dissatisfied, of all the young men to whom I have given letters of introduction during the last three years, and his father and I both strongly tried to persuade him not to go. Many have, and are doing well, and the last letter I received in from a young man I sent out to Winnipeg two years ago, when he was 20 years of age, earning eight shillings per week in an office here, and who after getting the necessary experience with farmers for two years, tells me he has just taken his own farm of 320 acres."

Farmers in need of help should apply to Mr. Newett, care of Geo. Williams, Sec.y' Y. M. C. A.

Over the River.

Misdemeanors of a Moulder.

On Monday last a moulder from Peterborough, of sanguine complexion, determined to celebrate the civic holiday. When the excursion party from Belleville arrived in town he welcomed one of the excursionists, an old friend, and proceeded to show him around. Being thirsty, they visited most of the saloons in Peterborough, and about dinner time found themselves in Ashburnham and entered the hotel of Mr. C. Young. The moulder was excited and during dinner made use of some insulting language to one of Mr. Young's guests, and upon that gentlemen remonstrating with him, he playfully hurled his dinner knife at him. Mr. Young thereupon closed with him and after [illegible] He was wroth, and as Mr. Young closed the door, he picked up a large stone and hurled it at him. It shattered a pane in the glass door and struck Mr. Young on the head, raising a large lump. He then went around to the front door, and to revenge himself, proceeded to assault an old gentleman of some 70 years of age. A bystander interfered, whereupon the assaulter struck him, but the other retaliated to such an extent that he was obliged to plead for mercy. He was again bundled into the street and started for Peterborough. On the way over the gentleman who had chastised him passed by and our muddled moulder, thinking the chance too good to be lost, opened fire on him from a stone pile, without doing any injury. The gentleman encountered him afterwards in the town, and again administered a reminder to him. He then concluded to leave town, and Constable Craig is anxiously looking after him.

The team of Mr. George Hutchinson, of Otonabee, were standing in front of the Otonabee Mills on Monday, when they became frightened and started up the village street at a furious gallop. Narrowly missing several vehicles, they swerved in opposite the Maple Leaf Hotel, smashed a step and almost uprooted two posts sunk three feet in the ground. From there they tore along the sidewalk to the corner of Elizabeth and Robinson streets, where they ran into a fence and were stopped. The wagon was pretty well shaken up.

Two young men well known in Ashburnham distinguished themselves by disturbing the peace of the Sabbath evening, by firing four shots from a revolver at some parties passing in a buggy in the north end of the village. Where is our police force?

Burleigh Fal's Hotel.

This delightful summer resort is being largely patronized this season by residents of town and visitors from a distance. Though a large number of the commodious rooms of this hotel are occupied, there are still vacancies for several others. Those who desire a cool bracing scene of relaxation from the heat, hurry and worry of business with good fare, good fishing, delightful scenery and splendid boating, should take advantage of the opportunity offered of sojourning at the Burleigh Falls Hotel. Terms moderate. The place is easy of access by boat and rail, and visitors who seek pleasure in this neighborhood will be well rewarded.

Social Purity.

The Globe of to-day says:—A lecture was delivered in the members' parlor, Y.M.C.A., last night, on "Social Purity." The room was filled to its utmost capacity with men, and the lecture was listened to with great interest. Mr. W. H. Newett, General Secretary, Y. M. C. A., Manchester, England, was the lecturer, and at the close read a pledge which was taken by a standing vote by nearly every one present. Mr. Wm. Blackly presided, and at the close a vote of thanks to the lecturer was moved by Mr. Robert Kilgour, and seconded by Mrs. Freeland, and unanimously carried. It is probable that at an early date a branch of the Social Purity Society will be formed in Toronto. Mr Newett will [illegible] in the Y. M. C. A. hall here to-night, to men only.

Company "G" Assembly.

HEADQUARTERS, 57TH BATTALION,
PETERBOROUGH, ONT., Aug. 11th.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—I was much surprised on my return from A.C.A. Camp on Saturday last, where I have been for two weeks, to hear what had taken place in regard to Company "G" Ball. I write, that the public may know that I think Major Bell was right, and that when I answered a telegram on Monday, 3rd inst., asking me to allow my name to be used as patron for Company "G" assembly, I had no idea as to what had transpired here, or I should have declined.

Major Bell was right in repudiating the forgery of his name, for such it was. He was in town, and if his name was worth having it was worth asking for.

As to the anonymous letters that have been published against Major Bell, while I am surprised at the press publishing them, I think he is right, in having too much contempt for any one who can write such letters and is afraid or ashamed to put his name to them, to take any notice of them.

I am always glad to promote the interest of the volunteers in any way I can, but I cannot allow my name or the names of the officers of the Battalion to be used without authority. I am sorry that these things have occurred, but the fault was not ours.

Yours truly,
JAMES Z. ROGERS,
Lieut.-Colonel 57th Battalion.

Town Council.

Taxing the Showmen—A Military Camp for Peterborough.

A special meeting of the Town Council, called for the purpose of amending by-law 407, was held on Monday evening. The following members were present:—Messrs. Cahill, McNaughton, Kelly, Green, Yelland, Kendry and Rutherford. In the absence of Mayor Cox Councillor Rutherford was called to the chair.

Councillor Cahill moved that the reading of the minutes be dispensed with and that the meeting proceed to take up general business. The legality of this course was questioned by Councillor McNaughton and pronounced against by the Clerk, but a vote was taken on the motion which was carried. The proposed amendment to by-law 407 was then brought up for consideration. Its object is to legalize the levying of a license fee from circuses visiting the town and making a parade of the streets, said fee not to exceed $100.

Councillor Cahill expressed his disapproval of the amendment, but stated that he should not vote against it if supported by a majority of the Council. The Council then went into committee of the whole, and the amendment was passed through the various stages necessary to render it operative.

Councillor Green then put in a resolution, seconded by Councillor Kelly, to the following effect:—"That the town engineer be authorize to strike the grade on certain portions of Reid, Hunter, Brock, Hall, Scott and Downie streets. At this juncture, however, Councillor Kelly moved the adjournment, and he and Councillor McNaughton leaving their seats the quorum was broken. At the request of the chairman the gentleman warned resumed their seats, and the meeting was adjourned to Thursday evening the 13th.

As the members were about to disperse Capt. and Quarter-master Stapleton of the 3rd Cavalry requested a short hearing, which was granted. He stated that he was in receipt of a letter from Col. Villiers D. A. G., stating that if certain requirements he would name were met by the town, he would bring the annual camp of the third Military District to Peterborough. Those conditions were the sinking of wells and construction of latrines, the expense of which would have to be borne by Peterborough. The speaker said he had made a partial canvas of the town and found the citizens quite willing to contribute towards the object, and desired to test the feeling of the Council in the matter. The presence of the camp in this vicinity would induce the circulation of some thousands of dollars in town, and confer considerable pecuniary advantages on it. He would like an expression from the gentlemen present as to whether, in the event of the citizens contributions being insufficient, the Council would make good any deficit.

Councillor McNaughton held that instead of the Government going begging for Peterborough to expend money on a site for the encampment, the Government should pay for the use of the ground. As an old volunteer who had served in more than one camp he could say that this was the custom.

The chairman thought the Council might contribute $50, but as the present proceedings were altogether informal, this could not, of course, be taken as official.

After some further explanations from Mr. Stapleton the meeting dispersed.

Monday's Voting.

The By Laws Both Sustained by a Large Majority.

Teaching Them How to Kiss.

A wicked correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal has been teaching the unkissing and unkissable Mexican senoritas how to kiss. One of them expressed a regret one day that she did not know how it was done, or what good there was in it. He says: gently folding back her head and throwing a rapid series of looks of unutterable nothings into my eyes, I gazed clean through her's for a moment, and then, with a long-drawn breath, I tapped her lips. It was a revelation to her; she quivered visibly, but, instead of returning my kiss, she broke away from my embrace and ran off to look herself up, frightened, pleased, and astonished. I was satisfied that I had done myself and country proud, although, to be candid, it was merely a mechanical operation with me, done for the sake of effect, as I did not really care for the girl. I think she remained in meditation for two days, but at last I saw her, and she told me, with a deep blush, that she wished she had been born in America, to be kissed like that."

FLORIDA.

A Graphic Account of its Wonders in Animal and Vegetable Life.

A correspondent of the Hartford Times, writing about the wonderful things seen in Florida, says:

We turn a sharp angle in the St. John's river, and pass near a bed of water lettuce, which is often carried by the wind or current into sheltered spots until it forms great masses of bright green vegetation. This plant is rightly named, for it closely resembles lettuce in appearance. It floats with its roots near the surface and grows without any dependence on the soil. In fact, that is one of the marvels of vegetable life down here. Air plants of great variety grow on the trunks of trees, and it is a matter of no importance whether the tree is alive or dead; in fact, tie the plants to the posts of the veranda and they flourish just as well, bloom and then die. Other plants grow pinned to a curtain; moss grows in air, and luxuriantly, if damp enough. The Spanish bayonet, tipped over and with no root in the ground, continues to shoot out its thick-spiked leaves.

We warp around into a creek so narrow that in many places we can touch the foliage on either side. Both banks of the creek nearly all the way are very low. The trees seem to grow out of the water. As the wind has little effect from the fact that the creek is so sheltered, the trees and vegetation are mirrored as clearly in the water as seen in the air above it. Only a thin line separates the upward growth from the downward reflection. We can look in either air or water, and scan the trunks of the trees and their foliage. And what variety of colors! There is the bright red flower of the swamp maple, with its following of fresh green leaves. There is the sweet gum, with its star-shaped leaves of all colors, from green to bronze. The idea occurred on the sight of this tree that the frosts of Winter nipped the leaves, and that before they had time to fall Spring had infused new life into them, and freshened up the autumnal tints. In strong contrast with the fresh green are the dark limbs and trunks of the tree, many of which have not yet put on their Summer attire. Among the trees the cypress attracts attention. Tall and straight, with a short growth of branches at the top, it grows very large, sometimes having a diameter of three feet. Its branches hang with moss, and in Spring it puts forth a somber-colored flower resembling dead leaves. Only now and then can we see one that has as yet put out its short, delicate leaf, which much resembles that of the pine, but is shorter and finer. One wonders how they get life enough to support such large bodies. But in these swamps the trees throw out no tap roots, and if the tops and branches were heavy and spreading they would be easily overthrown by fierce winds.

Through these swamps the mistletoe abounds. It is easier seen in Winter, for then its evergreen foliage contrasts strongly with the apparently lifeless tree. The mistletoe is not an airy plant. It lives on a live tree and fastens its roots firmly into the branch to which it is attached, so the further end of the limb often dies. It seems to be especially fond of the oak, and is never seen on the cypress or pine, though they may be near by. I think I have seen it on other trees beside the oak, but could not distinguish what they were in the distance. But as we sweep around some new point we are again brought back to admire the richness of the coloring. Here are the heavy, dark colors—the gray hanging moss and dark trunks. Here the eye passes on to lighter and gayer colors. Through the green and bronze leaves the crimson flower of the maple and white bloom of the wild plum are seen, and one hardly knows which to choose, the North with the fresh and variegated green and flowers of Spring, or the South with its deep and rich Autumnal tints. Here the contrast of colors in the Fall is not so striking, but Spring, with its fresh and early life, is certainly beautiful. Perhaps one insensibly contrasts it with snows and the dead wintry branches to which at this season of the year he has been accustomed.

Some may ask about animal life. A large number of tourists seem to act as if their chief object in coming to Florida was to see a live alligator. Warm days alligators can often be seen sunning themselves on a log, but, as the waves from the boat reach them, off they slide into the water. A cool day you may pass up and down the rivers and not discover one. There is a great scarcity of birds this Winter. A Winter or two ago we could see hundreds of ducks on the lake. This year there there are but a few, and as Spring approaches even they disappear. There are some herons here. Once in a while we see a white heron, but it is to be feared hunters will kill them off, as they have the paroquet. Occasionally we see a water turkey. It bears no resemblance to the domestic turkey, except that it is good to eat. It is not large, and is of a dull plumage. It sits like a cormorant on a log or tree bending over the water, and at sight of fish it dives, and often comes up a long distance from its diving-place.

The Electrical Age.

The possible applications of the principle of the electrical transmission of power, writes a contributor to the Van Nostrand's Magazine, are almost numberless. We shall, I believe, at no distant date, have great central stations, possibly situated at the bottom of coal pits, where enormous steam engines will drive many electric machines. We shall have wires laid along every street, the electricity tapped into every house, and the quantity of electricity used in every house registered as gas is at present. The storage battery will fill a place corresponding to the gasometer in the gas system, making the current steady, rendering the consumer independent of the irregular action or stoppages of the dynamos of the central station, and enabling the use of dynamos of the highest tension—i. e., those which produce currents of the greatest intensity. The electricity will be passed through little electric machines to drive machinery, to produce ventilation, to replace stoves, and to work all sorts of apparatus, as well as to give everybody an electric light. Solar heat will be used to run the dynamos in the cloudless regions. Everywhere the power of the [illegible] are to be utilized. Is not a millennium to be anticipated when the water-power of a country shall be available at every door?

Steam, which in the last century has conferred so many benefits on the world, will give way before electricity. The dynamo will replace the steam engine. This prediction seems wild and visionary, yet when steam was first thought of as an available force its advocates were considered, just as the advocates of dynamical electricity today are considered, mere enthusiasts. But public opinion never stops the march of intellect. After it had proved the powers of steam to be enormous, genius never halted, but straightway went on anticipating still more wonderful discoveries in the realm of electricity.

The prophetic kin of science was happily exhibited by Dr. Lardner in his treatise on the steam engine. "Philosophy," said he, half a century ago, "already directs her fingers at sources of inexhaustible power in the phenomena of electricity and magnetism, and many causes combine to justify the expectation that we are on the eve of mechanical discoveries still greater than any which have yet appeared, and that the steam engine itself, with the gigantic powers conferred upon it by the immortal Watt, will dwindle into insignificance in comparison with the hidden powers of nature still to be revealed; and the day will come when that machine which is now extending the blessings of civilization to the most remote skirts of the globe will cease to have existence, except in the page of history."

To-day we are beginning to appreciate the truth of this prophecy. To-day we see dynamical electricity in the forefront of the physical sciences. The principle of the transmission of power by electricity fast approaches its realization. We are, in truth, just entering upon a wonderful age.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

Chapter V—Continued.

"But I have a right to know."

"You have a right to ask, and I have a right to refuse to speak."

"Tell me of her family—her relatives."

"She has none, I believe, save myself."

I asked other questions, but could get no answers worth recording. I should return to England not much wiser than I left it. But there was one question to which I insisted on having a clear reply.

"What has that friend of yours that English-speaking Italian, to do with Pauline?"

Ceneri shrugged his shoulders and smiled.

"Macari! I am glad to be able to answer something fully, Mr. Vaughan. For a year or two before Pauline was taken ill, Macari supposed himself to be in love with her. He is now furious with me for allowing her to get married. He declares he was only awaiting her recovery to try his own luck."

"Why should he not have served your purpose as well as I seem to have?"

Ceneri looked at me sharply. "Do you regret, Mr. Vaughan?"

"No—not if there is a chance, ev slight chance. But I tell you, Dr. Ceneri, you have deceived and cajoled me shamefully."

I rose to take my leave. Then Ceneri spoke with more feeling than he had as yet displayed.

"Mr. Vaughan, do not judge me too harshly. I have wronged you, I admit. There are things you know nothing of. I must tell you more than I intended. The temptation to place Pauline in a position of wealth and comfort was irresistible. I am her debtor for a vast amount. At one time her fortune was about fifty thousand pounds. The whole of that I spent——"

"And dare to boast of it!" I said, bitterly. He waved his hand with dignity.

"Yes. I dare to speak of it. I spent it all for freedom—for Italy. It was in my keeping as trustee. I, who would have robbed my own father, my own son, should I hesitate to take her money for such an end? Every farthing went to the great cause, and was well spent."

"It was the act of a criminal to rob an orphan."

"Call it what you like. Money had to be found. Why should I not sacrifice my honor for my country as freely as I would have sacrificed my life?"

"It is no use discussing it—the matter is ended."

"Yes, but I tell you to show you why I wished to gain Pauline a home. Moreover, Mr. Vaughan"—here his voice dropped to a whisper—"I was anxious to provide that home at once. I am bound on a journey—a journey of which I cannot see the end, much less the returning. I doubt whether I should have decided to see you had it not been for this. But the chances are we shall never meet again."

"You mean you are engaged in some plot or conspiracy?"

"I mean what I have said—no more, no less. I will now bid you adieu."

Angry as I was with the man, I could not refuse the hand he stretched out to me.

"Farewell," he said, "it may be that in a year or two I shall write to you and ask you if my predictions as to Pauline's recovery have been fulfilled; but do not trouble to seek me or to inquire for me if I am silent."

So we parted. The carriage was waiting to take me back to the hotel. On my way thither I passed the man whom Ceneri had called Macari. He signaled to the driver to stop, and then entering the carriage, sat beside me.

"You have seen the doctor, Mr. Vaughan?" he asked.

"Yes. I have just come from him."

"And have learned all you wish to know, I hope?"

"A great many of my questions have been answered."

"But not all. Ceneri would not answer all."

He laughed, and his laugh was cynical and mocking. I kept silence.

"Had you questioned me," he continued, "I might have told you more than Ceneri."

"I came to ask Dr. Ceneri for all the information he could give me respecting my wife's mental state, of which I believe you are aware. If you can say anything that may be of use to me, I will beg you to speak."

"You asked him what caused it?"

"I did. He told me a shock."

"You asked him what shock. That he did not tell you?"

"He had his reasons for declining, I suppose."

"Yes. Excellent reasons—family reasons."

"If you can enlighten me, kindly do so."

"Not here, Mr. Vaughan. The doctor and I are friends. You might fly back and assault him, and I should get blamed. You are going back to England, I suppose?"

"Yes. I start at once."

"Give me your address, and perhaps I will write; or, better still, if I feel inclined to be communicative, I will call on you when I am next in London, and pay my respects to Mrs. Vaughan at the same time."

So eager was I to get at the bottom of the affair that I gave him my card. He then stopped the carriage and stepped out. He raised his hat, and there was a malicious triumph in his eyes as they met mine.

"Good-bye, Mr. Vaughan. Perhaps after all you are to be congratulated upon being married to a woman whose past it is impossible to rake up."

With this parting shaft—a shaft which struck deep and rankled—he left me. It was well he did so, before I caught him by the throat and strove to force him to explain his last words.

Longing to see my poor wife again, I went back to England with all speed.

CHAPTER VII.

CLAIMING RELATIONSHIP.

Yes, she was glad to see me back! In her uncertain clouded way she welcomed me. My great fear, that in the short time she would have entirely forgotten me, was groundless. She knew me and welcomed me. My poor Pauline! If I could but find the way to bring those truant senses back once more!

For months and months nothing of importance occurred. If my love's mind was, as Ceneri predicted to be gradually restored, the process was a tedious one. At times I thought her better—at times worse. The fact is there was little or no change in her condition. Hour after hour she sits in her apathy and listlessness; speaking only when spoken to; but willing to come with me anywhere; do anything I suggest, whenever, alas! I express my wish in words she can comprehend. Poor Pauline!

The greatest doctors in England have seen her. Each says the same thing. [illegible] recovery would be made more possible if the exact circumstances which brought about the calamity were known. These, I doubt if we shall ever learn.

A Modern Grievance.

One of the perplexing features of modern civilization in all large towns and cities are the boys on the streets; not merely the "street boys," but the boys who often leave homes and respectable parents, but who, when turned loose in the streets, make themselves almost as formidable as the Bedouin Arabs in the neighborhood of unarmed caravans.

If they do no serious damage, they commit sufficiently numerous small depredations to make them harmful, exasperating and sometimes dangerous. They break windows, they destroy the gas lamps, they throw snowballs, often loaded with stones, ice or pieces of coal. A boy or girl poorly dressed and pushing a small cart or gathering fuel is often made the target of these missiles. They anger beyond endurance the ashmen and peddlers, the squalor and meagerness of whose equipages excite their derision. They drive away their anatomical horses, upset their carts and follow them with yells, shouts, derision and weapons, when vainly trying to escape their tormentors.

That more of them do not provoke their victims to terrible retaliation is a tribute to the general belief that the boy of the period is not a malicious, but only a wanton, ungoverned and mischievous being—not a wildcat nor even a wolf, but a monkey whose antics are prompted by a rattle-headed craving for excitement and diversion rather than a set purpose to injure or a calculation as to the amount or kind of injury and annoyance his own enjoyment may involve.

But a serious tragedy has just occurred on one of the North River piers in New York which is due entirely to the inability of a man to longer endure the actual torment inflicted upon him by a crowd of boys who hovered about him and stung him like a swarm of bees.

He is a faithful, industrious workman, strictly temperate in his habits, and given strictly to minding his own business. But he has unfortunately a defect in his speech and is afflicted with Saint Vitus' dance. This was enough to arouse the attention of the gangs of boys who hang about the piers, and they were prompt to make the most of the new sport thus providentially thrown upon their tender mercies, which, like the tender mercies of the wicked, are cruel.

They at once began taunting him and annoying him with all conceivable ingenuity, and found exceeding great delight in his eccentric efforts to retort. They finally gave a practical turn to their jesting by throwing snowballs, stones and brickbats, absolutely interfering with the work of this man and his fellow-workmen.

The fusillade of fifty boys may easily be heavy enough to bring great public enterprises to a stand-still, and in this case it put a stop to the loading of coal, which the man was superintending. At last his patience was exhausted, and, going into his canal boat, he brought back his pistol, threatening to shoot unless the assaults of the boys ceased. They did not cease, and he fired, instantly killing a young man engaged at the hoisting rope. The testimony is conflicting as to whether he was concerned in the assault. In any event the killing will probably be held as manslaughter.

The penalty of death will never be allowed as a proper punishment for the misdeeds of these Arabs of the street; but those who know the amount of misery and loss they can inflict will see the necessity of some kind of regulation for them and punishment for their offenses, which shall be recognized as adequate. Unless something of the kind is provided it will begin to be hard to persuade juries to convict a man for turning with desperation and protecting himself at all hazards from what becomes, on account of his helplessness, well nigh intolerable. It is a wrong for which there ought to be somewhere a proper remedy.—Detroit Free Press.

It Was Too Good.

"Now, then," said Smith, as the last load of furniture was dumped into the new house, and he grabbed his gripsack to make for the train, to be gone a week, "I'll show you how the burglar alarm works. This is the main switch, and this is the continuous ringer. When you go to bed to-night set them both, and then go down stairs and open the cellar door. That will start the ringing and keep it up all the time I'm gone."

"But how can I sleep with the bell ringing all the time?"

"You can't and you are not expected to. What do you suppose a burglar alarm is for, but to keep people awake to be ready for burglars?"

She stood it for thirty-six hours and then telegraphed him:

"I have stopped the ringing and hired four men with shot-guns in the place of it."—Detroit Free Press.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Light to moderate winds, mostly easterly; continued fair weather; slightly higher temperature.

Attempted Arson.

A most deliberate attempt was made on Monday morning to set fire to a stable in rear of the Lansdowne Rink, and had not the blaze been noticed when it was it is quite likely that an adjoining house would have been destroyed. The attempt was so deliberate that it seems as if a repetition of it was probable, and the proper authorities should keep a sharp look-out.

First Class Hardware.

When we were in Stethem's Hardware store to-day we were quite taken by the beautiful assortment of bird cages he has from that reliable maker "John Maxheimer, New York city." Mr. Stethem was just then opening some lovely goods from New York. The Star Hunting Knife is a beauty. Sets of turnscrews to fit one handle must be very convenient. The Spiral Screwdriver should be invaluable to carriage and cabinet makers, and Mallinsons' scissors, which, next to Heinsich's, have the best reputation of any made in the States, at 45 and 50 cents each.

Accident on the Midland.

A young man named Thomas Uglow, a son of Captain Uglow, of the schooner Annie Mulvey, who was injured during the Esplanade fire in Toronto, and is now confined to his bed at Port Hope, was yesterday making his initial trip as a brakeman, over the Midland, the train on which he was working being a lumber laden freight running between Peterborough and Lindsay. In passing along the cars he caught his foot in a piece of board running across the top of the car load between the stakes that hold the lumber in position, and losing his footing fell headlong between the rapidly moving cars, five of which passed over him. That he was not crushed to death is a miracle; but when rescued it was found that although he had sustained severe injuries he was still living. Both bones of his right forearm are broken, and he has sustained a compound fracture of the humeris and an ugly punctured wound near the shoulder. He was brought to Peterborough and left in the Superintendent's office, where Dr. Pigeon temporarily dressed his injuries, after which he was removed to Port Hope on the 8.30 train.

He's Got 'Em On.

"The only original," John Smith, is now the sole proprietor of the prodigious pair of boots, dimensions of which were given in the EXAMINER on Monday, the contractor, Mr. Joseph Griffin, of Hunter street, having, by the employment of a several extra hands and the use of special machinery imported expressly for the job, succeeded in completing these unique brogans. No official notification is yet to hand as to whether it is Mr. Smith's intention to set on the gentle hint given on Monday and shake the dust of Peterborough off his newly shod feet, but it may not be out of place to suggest to him that the ambitious village of Hamilton, which nestles at the foot of a range of hills on Burlington Bay, Lake Ontario, would be sure to accord him, with his unutterable inexpressibles and colossal cowhides, a hearty welcome. The ladies of the aforesaid ambitious village have long enjoyed the unenviable reputation of wearing the largest boots known to civilization, and would be so delighted on discovering one human being with larger feet than their own that "the original," should he decide to make a home in Hamilton, may calculate on receiving an ovation which would put to utter shame and confusion any of the receptive demonstrations recently accorded to returning heroes of the North-West. Now Smith! Peterborough boots thee! Hamilton hills thee! "Git!"

PETERBOROUGH'S CIVIC.

The Firemen's Excursion to the Falls.

Trip to Sturgeon Point.

A Day of Pleasure Unmarred by Accident of any Kind.

Owing to the much to be regretted misunderstanding, regarding the date of the civic holiday, the day was this year divested of some of the interest usually attending it; but, notwithstanding this slight drawback, large numbers of town folk availed themselves of the numerous excursions, and spent the day on the cool waters of Lake Ontario, or pic-nicing in the umbrageous groves that are so plentiful nearer home. The weather was delightful, the temperature being sufficiently high to enable the pleasure seekers to appreciate to the full, the cool breezes of the lake, or the grateful shade of the trees, and yet not high enough to cause discomfort [illegible] any moment occurred to cast a gloom over the day's pleasure, and the civic holiday of 1885 will be looked back to with pleasure by the many who enjoyed immunity from toil on that day.

THE FIREMEN'S EXCURSION.

At an early hour in the morning the harsh clangour of the fire alarm bell announced to many a drowsy fireman that it was time for him to be up and making ready for the long anticipated excursion. From 5 o'clock till the hour the train left the C. P. R., single individuals, couples, groups of three or four, and families, many of them struggling with plethoric baskets of provisions, thronged the road to the station, and when the eleven coaches slowly steamed out shortly after 6 o'clock there could not have been less than 500 souls on board. The journey to North Toronto, which was reached in two hours, was uneventful, and the train was run round the curve and down to the Union Station shortly before nine. Here the party disembarked from the train and proceeded to the York street wharf, where the fine steamer Rupert, with steam up, was awaiting them. The party lost no time in getting aboard and were soon steaming out of the western channel and for Niagara. A few minutes more and the low lying outline of the sandy island, relieved by the clusters of willow trees, and the pretty red roofs of the Swiss cottages and the Hotel Hanlan, was lost in the distance, and the tall spire of St. James, rearing its head to the skies, was all that told of the busy city left behind. After a delightful ride of about three hours, during which the band, stationed on deck, discoursed sweet music at intervals, the town of Niagara was sighted, and a few minutes later the Rupert steamed in close to the frowning muzzles of the guns on Fort Niagara, and, making a wide sweep of the majestic river, brought up at the Canada Southern wharf. There the party again took the cars. The picturesque glimpses of the river scenery, which could ever and anon be caught from the train, made the upward journey seem short, and it seemed that but a few minutes had elapsed when the famous falls, came in view. Once more taking to terra firma the party were soon dispersed to all parts of the village of Niagara, visiting the rapids, cave of the winds, the whirlpool and many other famous sights. In this way the few hours at their disposal were soon spent, and the party once more aboard the train en route for home. The homeward voyage on the Rupert was beguiled by singing, and music by the Band, till the flashing of the light at Gibralter Point and the twinkling of the myriad shore lights betokened the approach to Toronto, when all crowded on the forward deck to see the great city loom up out of the darkness. The point was soon rounded and the Rupert brought to her moorings, when the excursionists were transferred for the last time and started on the final stage of their homeward journey. The party, tired and weary, but delighted with the way the holiday had been spent, arrived in Peterborough about 1.30 a.m.

HEADING SOUTHWARD

IN ALL THEIR GRANDEUR,

Stoning a Salvationist.

As W. E. Paton, a sergeant in the Saved Army, was going home on Saturday evening, after a meeting of the Army, he was set upon at the west end of Hunter street by a number of boys whom he had reproved for unruly conduct at the meeting. They pelted him with stones, one of which struck him on the temple, inflicting an ugly gash and rendering him unconscious. On reviving he got up and walked over to Mr. Earl's residence, where the wound was dressed. The services of Dr. Clarke were afterwards called in, Paton's wound being of a serious character. The perpetrators of the assault are known, and proceedings will be instituted against them.

A. O. U. W. Excursion.

An excursion under the auspices of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Brockville, Smith's Falls and Perth is being run from those points to Peterborough. The party are expected to arrive at the C. P. R. station about noon, and will be met by the Peterborough members of the craft, who have formed themselves into a committee to entertain the visitors. The Fire Brigade Band has been secured to head the procession from the C. P. R. station to the drill shed, where preparations are in progress to receive the visiting brethren suitably. After dinner has been served the committee will take the visitors around town and show them the various points of interest. It is expected that there will be six hundred brethren in the party.

Lacrosse at Riverside.

This Page from Riverside was by Those to Call.

The Riverside Lacrosse Club opened the new grounds yesterday by playing a match with the Norwood Club. When the two teams took up their positions on the field it was noticed that the visitors had the advantage in weight, to which their success should be attributed. The following are the names of the players with their positions :—

Norwood.		Riverside.
Hendren	Goal	Phelan
Brennan	Point	Higgins
Stewart	Cover Point	Annand
Hill	1st Defence	Neil
Legrow	2nd Defence	Duncan, R.
Patterson	3rd Defence	Packenham
Eaton	Centre	Larone. F.
Stephenson	3rd Home	Begley, J.
Stephenson	2nd Home	Heaps
Patterson	1st Home	Patterson
Cumming	Outside Home	Mercier, A.
McKelvy	Inside Home	Giroux

Messrs. J. Harper and R. S. Kelly captained the teams, M. Giroux and W. Morrow were the umpires and Mr. J. Ross, of Montreal, acted as referee.

The first game was well contested and was [illegible] match, which interested the three hundred ladies that occupied the grand stand. The play on the part of the visitors was characterised by a good deal of shinny, and on the contrary that of the Ashburnham youngsters, particularly Larone and Begley, by nice team play. After the teams had been engaged 14 minutes Mercier induced the rubber to the visitors' goal, where it was put through.

The tables turned after this game and the next three were chalked down to the credit of the visitors after about an hour's tussel.

At the conclusion of the match a hundred yard race and running long jump took place, and were won by Sheehy and Packenham respectively.

Mr. Calcutt is to be congratulated for the comfort which his new grounds afford in the respect of seating accommodation and we hope that all lacrosse matches will be played next year in the Riverside Park.

Peterborough Cheese.

Mr. B. Green yesterday shipped two car loads of cheese, made in this district, from Lindsay to Montreal. D. G. McBean is the consignee.

Locks.

Mr. Stethem is selling off his large stock of best American rim and mortise locks at a great sacrifice, in order to make room for the new stock manufactured by the Peterborough Lock Works, it being his intention for the future to handle no other make. Persons requiring locks will find this a splendid chance of getting first class goods at low prices.

Secret Sin.

There will, no doubt, be a large audience of young men to listen to the lecture to be given to-night by W. H. Newett Esq., Secretary of the Manchester, England, Y. M. C. A. The subject he is to consider is one about which there has been too much false modesty, and it is well sometimes to have the plain truth spoken in the matter. As the Y. M. C. A. hall is not very large, those wanting seats had better be there early.

To Sturgeon Point.

About 250 people of all ages and sexes availed themselves of the excursion to Sturgeon Point and left for that place by the Midland at 8 o'clock. They arrived at the Point about 10 a.m., and spent a most agreeable day in pic-nicing, boating, fishing and taking in the attractions offered at this favorite retreat. Some of the party returned by the 6 p.m. train, but the majority remained later and arrived in the city by 9 o'clock. Everything passed off quietly and no accident occurred to mar the pleasure of the day.

Drop Shots.

There will be a meeting of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club at 8 o'clock this evening in the Little Windsor Hotel. Members who had tickets to sell for the garden party are requested to attend, ready to make returns.

The Brampton Excelsiors will cross sticks with the Peterborough first twelve to-morrow afternoon, and the second twelve will strive for honors with a team from Perth. These clubs would have played here on Monday had it not been for the change in the civic holiday, which rendered it impossible for the original plan to be carried out.

AND HAVE THEM SUBSTANTIALLY BOUND.

—READ WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:—

COBOURG WORLD.—"We have seldom seen better binding."

PORT HOPE TIMES.—"We are surprised at the excellent workmanship, which could not be surpassed by any establishment in the Dominion."

LINDSAY POST.—"The binding was examined by a large number, and all were much pleased with the appearance and thoroughness with which the work had been executed.

WEST DURHAM NEWS.—"We had our books very neatly bound at the EXAMINER Bindery, and they are, in every particular, a credit to the establishment."

ORMEMEE HERALD.—"We have received from the Peterborough EXAMINER Bookbindery our volumes of Picturesque Canada, bound in a most beautiful and lasting style. Persons who have examined the binding and general finish of the work, pronounce it equal, if not superior, to any work of the kind turned out of city binderies."

BOBCAYGEON INDEPENDENT.—"The workmanship is in every respect first-class, and of a lasting and wearing character, and handsome design."

An Orange Sermon.

We have been requested to publish an Orange sermon, delivered by Rev. A. E. De St. Dalmas to the Lakefield brethren. We were unable to find room for it in yesterday's weekly. It will, however, appear in Saturday's daily edition, and in the following weekly.

The Colonel is Coming.

Capt. Stapleton this morning received a communication from Col. Villiers stating that that officer would be here at noon for the purpose of inspecting the site for the proposed encampment of the third military district. If the camp will be located here credit will be due to Captain Stapleton for his efforts.

A Popular Pastor.

Rev. W. C. Bradshaw, rector of St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, left town this morning for the purpose of enjoying a short period of rest from pastoral labor, into which he has thrown so much energy and earnestness. Previous to his departure the members of his congregation presented Mr. Bradshaw with a purse of money, coupled with most complimentary expressions of their appreciation of his unselfish labour among them, and fervent wishes that he might enjoy a pleasant holiday.

Fiery Fitzgerald.

Edward Fitzgerald, while suffering from a severe attack of alcoholic paralysis, yesterday fell foul of Constable Pigeon. The latter functionary, despite his dove-like name, acted the part of a hawk, and swooped down on Edward with the intention of depositing him in the municipal dove-cote on the market square. Fitzgerald strongly objected and was only conveyed there after a strenuous resistance. On being arraigned before the acting Police Magistrate this morning he was dismissed with a caution, not being a [illegible] respect.

The Circus.

In spite of Peterborough's Prohibitory Council and the dread that the prospect of paying a $100 license fee would naturally inspire in the heart of a showman, Doris and his aggregation, accompanied by the usual attendant train of fakirs and fire-eaters, skeleton men, living wonders and fat ladies, arrived in Ashburnham this morning, and before many citizens were out of bed had spread his broad expanse of tented field on Riverside Park. The town was soon filled up with visitors from the country, all of whom seemed attracted as if by magnetism (the animal magnetism peculiar to circuses) across the Otonabee. Shortly after ten o'clock the parade took place, being confined, however, to the limits of Ashburnham. Large crowds were present on Riverside Park, and a thriving business is being done the brigade of candy butchers, lemonade sharks, and stentor-lunged sideshowmen, who, with their thousand and one attractions, have taken up the position on the grounds and are lying in wait for the unwary.

On the War Path.

Two Hundred Indians Restless Near Battleford.

BATTLEFORD, N. W. T., Aug 12.—S. Bellasdyne reports that there are two hundred Indians on the war path between this place and Swift Current. Matters are on the move. H. Reed and Agent Roe are off to Poundmaker's reserve with a Mounted Police force, to take notes of the actual state of affairs.

Krao.

A sceptical representative of the EXAMINER was this morning detailed to attend the levee being given at the Grand Central Hotel by John B. Doris' trump card, "the missing link," Krao. On arriving at the hotel the reporter was received by a bland gentleman with a Teutonic accent, who introduced him to the phenomenal young lady. In general appearance Krao strongly resembles many another little "cullud gal" seen by the scribe, but the bland gentleman, who evidently knows his business, proceeded to direct attention to a number of authropological peculiarities in the little lady, to which the S. R., not being versed in that particular branch of science, failed to catch on. He observed, however, that Krao's body, though not as hirsute as the posters would lead one to anticipate, was covered all over with an abnormal growth of hair, that her fingers are double-jointed, and that the cartilage of her ears and nose, if any exists, is phenomonally soft and plastic. The B. G. aforesaid also pointed out that Krao has pouches in the inside of her cheek, and in proof of the assertion the young lady withdrew from her mouth a small marble which was supposed to have been lying perdu in the cavernous recesses of the pouch. This peculiarity does not, however, appear to be confined to Krao. There are scores of young men in Peterborough, and everywhere else, who, to judge by the motion of their jaws and the dimensions of the packets of fine cut they contrive to stow away in one side of their face, must have this anthropological peculiarity in common with Krao. The skeptical reporter was also shown portraits of two monstrosities alleged to be the parents of Krao, but although too polite to raise any question on the subject, felt grave doubt as to the reality of the phenomenous progenitors. Whether Krao is as represented, a specimen of a peculiar race, or the result of a freak of nature, she is certainly one of the greatest of living curiosities, and alone well worth the admission fee to see.

The Summer Hotel Widow.

If anyone who has traveled much in the summer has encountered a fashionable summer resort hotel without its widow it is very exceptional. The widow is inevitable to the surroundings. She is always interesting, generally has fine eyes and dresses well and wears diamonds. But it is her manner as a rule, that is most attractive. In nine cases out of ten she has a little girl whose early retirement to the arms of Morpheus is her greatest anxiety, or rather one of her greatest, for she seems anxious when left alone even after relieved of this annoyance. Her manner is usually brilliant and effusive and almost always insures her the notice and attention of gentlemen. She does things as a matter of course, that the young unmarried ladies are forbidden by their mothers to do, and the mothers have a hard time explaining to the daughters why what is right for the widows is wrong for them. The mothers very often take revenge by misrepresenting the widow and telling their daughters to have nothing to do with her. But the widow has a good time and very often the unmarried girls don't. Still, according to her own standards, she keeps within bounds, and no matter how hardly pressed is generally mistress of the situation. This is the gay young widow. Of course there are others who are saints in deportment.—Philadelphia Times.

It was at the roller-skating rink. They were gliding gracefully around the wild expanse to the entrancing strains of "See-saw." He was one of the proud—but so bashful—rink professors, and she a giddy young miss—and so pretty. See, she bends her graceful head to catch the encouraging words he is whispering to her—so full of flattery. How sweetly she smiles as she whispers: "And were you ever at Albany before?" "O, yes," he replies; "a few years ago I had the pleasure of visiting your beautiful city, and, I remember it well, I stopped at the Kenmore." Not so romantic when, a few days after, the proprietress of the Kenmore happened to be one of the onlookers at the rink, and, while talking with this sweet young miss, espied the dandy professor who had stopped at the Kenmore. "Why," she exclaimed, "there goes one of my old elevator boys.—Albany Journal.

The language of flowers: Poor Charlie sighed and said, "My favorite flower, my dear, is the forget-me-not." "And mine," she said, "is mari-gold," and then poor Charlie knew the game was up, and got.—Judge.

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The lunatic fringe! O, the lunatic fringe!
That barbarous shred of barbarianism,
Ah, sure! common sense never got such a dinge
On the top of his head since old Adam's creation.

And yet, like an owl will they ogle about
With a mane on the brow like a water-dog's hip,
Or a Cotswold sheep; or a snivelling lout
Of an idiot boy with an idiot clip.

The persistency with which so many of the gentler sex continue, year after year, to disfigure the human face divine, is most astonishing. It is not a great many years since there seemed to be a conspiracy among our fair sisters to abolish the top-head altogether, the hair of the front being drawn back, and the back hair pulled up with a determination and energy which caused every hair-bulb to grasp and cling for dear life. Now, however, a great change has taken place; the back of the head, too, often clipped, or towzle and tasteless; the top, a shapeless peawisp, and the face a blinking owl's. Pure taste, or good sense has nothing, whatever, to do with it. It is simply a kind of craze that comes over a portion of humanity periodically, in one form or another; and with the individual, in all cases, the less the individuality, the greater the craze—the madness to be ugly. "Alas, wellaway!" we have no right to laugh at the absurdities of the Chinese; the paint of the untutored Indian, or the tatooing and savage ornamentation of the man-eating South Sea Islander.

Mrs. James Lang, sr., is improving.

The locomotive that was in the huckleberry marsh has arisen in its might and skedadled.

A cargo of brick arrived last week for Campbell & McNeil. The work on their block is being pushed forward with energy.

Mr. Adam Rutherford, of Otonabee, who lives near Zion Church, was thrown from his buggy last Monday and seriously injured. The horse shied in consequence of a dog coming suddenly before it from the roadside. He received a nasty wound on the back of the head. An artery of considerable size being torn but not severed, had nearly exhausted him before the arrival of a surgeon.

Quite a few people from here joined the Good Templer's excursion from Peterboro' to Belleville on Monday last.

Some two or three weeks ago a child of some fifteen months, of Mr. John Knox, of the 6th line of Otonabee, accidentally swallowed a large bone button, which stuck in its throat near the entrance of the stomach, for several days. It is all right again, however.

Mr. John Wright, of Ashburnham, occupied the pulpit of the Rev. F. Andrews last Sabbath. He is a young man of much promise, and the time is coming, no doubt, when he will prove an ornament and credit to the cloth.

Rev. Mr. Carmichael, of Norwood, conducted divine service here last Sabbath.

The remains of Mrs. Gillespie, relict of the late Geo. Gillespie, were conveyed to their final resting place in the Keene cemetery last Friday afternoon. She was the mother of John Gillespie, at present presentor in the Keene Presbyterian Church, and sister of the late Andrew Jaffrey, Esq., of Cobourg, who at the time of his death was one of the senators of old Canada. Mrs. Gillespie was highly respected by all who knew her and was followed to the grave by a large concourse of relatives and acquaintances—gathered to her fathers at the ripe age of 83 years and 10 months.

Cure for Rattlesnake-Poison.

Marlborough (N. Y.) Letter to New York Times: Charles M. Purdy is one of the leading commission merchants in New York who handle the fruit products of the Hudson Valley. Mr. Purdy's residence is near Marlborough. About eight years ago Mr. Purdy's mother, then a young woman, while rambling along the bank of the Hudson here, on what is now the Thomas T. Buckley estate, was bitten by a rattlesnake on the leg. The poison caused great pain and the limb was discolored very much, and the old settlers said that the only thing to do was to mount a fast horse and to ride to the Marlborough Mountain and coax an old Indian woman who lived there then all alone in a cave, to come and cure her. This was done and the live of Mrs. Purdy was saved through the medicine furnished by this old squaw. It is a simple remedy—a small cupful of the juice of the plantain weed, which is to be found along every road and in nearly every door yard in the country.

Inquiries made among farmers and country people generally elicited the information that plantain weed is used extensively for pouliticing to heal up running sores and to break up cases of chills and fever. Dr. A. H. Palmer of the town says that a handful of plantain leaves made into a cup of tea breaks up severe attacks of certain malarial disorders when other species fail. Old inhabitants say plantain leaves years ago were considered a sure cure for hydrophobia. Wood choppers on the Plattekill, Marlborough, and Shawangunk Mountains say they have long known that plantain juice would prevent fatal results from the bite of a rattlesnake. Toads and other animals know the medicinal properties of the plantain weed. When bitten by a snake they invariably hop to where the specific can be found.

What a Demoralised Dude Did.

It was on a dummy returning from the sham battle at the Presidio that a dude and two dudines of the prurient breed were overheard conversing.

"Yes, by jawve, I was nevah so rawtled in me life," said the alleged male. "I was looking for you ghals, you knaw, and the first thing I knew, by jawve, I found myself alone and about a thousand of those—ah—cavalry fellows galloping down on me, shooting their dreadful pistols, you knaw—and chopping with their beastly swords."

"Good gracious! Did you run?"

"Run? Naw!" responded the eyeglass attachment indignantly. "I just stood still and screamed."—San Francisco Post.

HUCKLEBERRIES.

There is abundance of huckleberries this season and the berriers are taking advantage of the luscious fruit. Last week the steamer Maple Leaf ran several double trips to the back lakes for the benefit of campers and berriers.

Belleville.

The Knights of Labour demonstration and firemen's tournament at this place next Monday, (Civic Holiday) will be the largest labor celebration east of Toronto this year. The members of the local Assembly have been working assiduously for several weeks to ensure a good programme, and the proceedings of the day will be witnessed by thousands of spectators. The trades procession in the morning will be the finest thing ever seen in Belleville, also the physical display in the evening. The agricultural grounds are being fitted up for the sports and games. A grand stand has been built and a floor will be laid in the building for dancing. There will be six or eight bands in the city, and four visiting fire companies. The cash prizes will aggregate $300. A band competition will be held in the evening at the bicycle park, where a large grand stand is now being erected. It is expected that fully fifteen thousand people will witness this monster celebration.

North Monaghan.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The council met on Tuesday, the 4th day of August, 1885. Present—The Reeve and Councillors Dunlop, Brownscombe, Johnston and McIntosh. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

A petition was received from Donald McKeller and others desiring the construction of a drain along a new street called Erskine Avenue in the 11th concession of North Monaghan.

A communication from Mr. Pearse, county clerk and treasurer, showing that the sum of $1,086.22 was required for county purposes, was received.

Applications from school trustees to levy the following amounts on their respective school sections were received, viz: School Section No. 1, $390; No. 2, $400; No. 3, $300; and No. 4, 200.

Accounts were presented from Jas. Lillico, for 185 loads of gravel at 10c. per load, $18.50; from Samuel Beavis, for cedar and repairing culvert, $5.00; and from B. Shortly, for bag for clerk, $4.00; which accounts, on motion of Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Dunlop, were ordered to be paid.

By-law No. 322, to levy a rate 1 6-10 mills in the dollar for county purposes, and 1 mill in the dollar for township purposes, also by-law No. 323, to levy school rates received their several readings and were passed, signed and sealed. By-law No. 324, appointing Mr. G. Ranney engineer, to make an examination of the locality to be drained by the opening of a drain along the line between lots 11 and 12 in the 11th concession of the township of North Monaghan and the deepening and straightening of the creek through same, and to procure plans and estimates and an assessment of the real property to be benefitted by such work, was read a first, second and third time and passed.

A deputation of the Agricultural Society of the West Riding of Peterborough, consisting of Dr. Kincaid and Messrs. Wm. Collins and John McClelland addressed the council on behalf of the funds of the said society and succeeded in obtaining a grant of $100.

On motion, the reeve and councillors Dunlop and McIntosh were appointed to meet a deputation of the Cavan council on Monday the 7th day of September next, at 2 o'clock p.m., at the bridge on the boundary between Cavan and Monaghan, in the 12th concession of Monaghan and the 13th concession of Cavan to examine and arrange upon making the necessary repairs on said bridge.

Hastings.

(From Our Own Correspondence.)

The social given by the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church in the old Temperance Hall on Tuesday evening of last week, notwithstanding the unfavorableness of the weather, was largely attended. Many friends from the neighboring churches were present. After the good things, in the shape of ice cream, lemonade, cakes, &c., were dispensed with a short impromptu programme was rendered in the way of speeches, songs and recitations by a few of the ladies and gentlemen present, after which the company dispersed, feeling that they had spent a pleasant and sociable evening. Proceeds of social, $89.00.

Camping being the rage of the season some of the young gentlemen in town, after due consideration, decided this would be a pleasant way to spend their holidays. But after a four days sojourn in the wilderness came to the conclusion that there were other things more agreeable than having too extremes meet, that of being kept too warm through the day and too cool at night. They returned home sadder but wiser men.

The R. T. of T. purpose holding an ice-cream social in the Temperance Hall on Friday Aug. 21st. The committee in whose hands it is placed, intend making it as pleasant and interesting as possible. An excellent programme will be furnished. The members and friends at large are cordially invited to attend.

The prospects at present in our usually quiet town are that before another week passes we will have brought before us a copy of the Hastings Observer, issued by our enterprising townsman, Mr. H. Merton. Having been successful in securing the services of Mr. Muary, of Sarnia, the public anticipate having a spicy and interesting local paper placed before them. We wish him every success in his new undertaking.

Monday being civic holiday in Belleville many of our villagers availed themselves of the opportunity of visiting the neighboring towns of Peterborough and Belleville, through the excursion which took place from Belleville to Peterborough and intervening stations. All returned satisfied with their short but pleasant trip.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. II.]

Mrs. Susanna Moodie.

"I am obnoxious to each carping tongue
That says my hand a needle better fits;
A poet's pen all scorn I should thus wrong.
For such despite they cast on female wits;
If what I do prove well, it won't advance—
They'll say it's stolen, or else it was by chance."

—ANNE BRADSTREET. The Four Elements

In our last article we referred to Mrs' Moodie's first Canadian venture, "Roughing it in the Bush," and to the numerous other works which issued from her facile pen before her death.

She herself admitted a great prejudice was felt against this book, although she frankly says she believes her writings had not deterred a single emigrant from coming to Canada, nor did she write with this intention. Moreover, she states her book showed no dislike to Canada; yet, on page 197, she says she wrote home abusing it as "the worst country God ever called out of chaos."

All this, and much more, we learn from a somewhat lengthy preface written in 1871. There she admits that the hardships encountered by many emigrants were due more to their unfitness or to their previous idle habits and useless training than to the condition, prospects or resources of the country.

We all know how true this is. Many a young scion of some noble house or unpractical officer of the army or navy came to Canada like the Moodies, who were utterly ignorant of agriculture, and who knew nothing of the simplest duties of a settler. To place such men on free farms was a blunder; to bid them carve out a home for themselves in a bush was cruelty in the extreme. We have seen how quickly their small capital disappears, we know how soon discouragements fall upon them and how, too often, vicious habits are acquired by such men in the backwoods. They are quite unfitted for the stern realities of life in a country like this, where, to get on, a man must be ready to put his shoulder to the wheel and not sit down repining and grumbling at Providence.

Mrs. Moodie had faith in Canada, though it took nearly forty years to produce it! Here is how she writes of the country in 1871:—"Look at her vast resources, her fine, healthy climate, her fruitful soil, the inexhaustible wealth of her pine forests, the untold treasures hidden in her unexplored mines. What other country possesses such an internal navigation for transporting its products from distant Manitoba to the sea, and from thence to every port in the world! If an excellent Government, defended by wise laws, a loyal people and a free church can make people happy and proud of their country, surely we have every reason to rejoice in our new Dominion."

But it is time to turn to Mrs. Moodie's poetry, and we do so by quoting a few stanzas of her well-known and beautiful picture of

INDIAN SUMMER.

By the purple haze that lies
On the distant rocky height,
By the deep blue of the skies,
By the smoky amber light,
Through the forest arches streaming
Where Nature on her throne sits dreaming,
And the sun is scarcely gleaming.
Through the cloudlets, snowy white,—
Winter's lovely herald greets us,
Ere the ice-crowned tyrant meets us.

A mellow softness fills the air,—
No breeze on wanton wing steals by,
To break the holy quiet there,
Or make the waters fret and sigh,
Or the golden alders shiver,
That bend and kiss the placid river,
Flowing on, and on for ever.
But the little waves are sleeping,
O'er the pebbles slowly creeping,
That last night were flashing, leaping,
Driven by the restless breeze,
In lines of foam beneath yon trees.

Dressed in robes of gorgeous hue,
Brown and gold with crimson blent,
The forest to the waters blue
Its own enchanting tints has lent;—
In their dark depths, life-like glowing,
We see a second forest growing,
Each pictured leaf and branch bestowing
A fairy grace to that twin wood
Mirror'd within the crystal flood.

We have only space to quote one verse more of this glorious description of a season dear to all Canadians. The poem is certainly a noble one, and upon it alone Mrs. Moodie might rest her claim to a niche among Canadian worthies. She thus concludes:

The day declines, what splendid dyes,
In fleckered waves of crimson driven,
Flash o'er the saffron sea that lies
Glowing within the western heaven!
O, it is a peerless even!
See the broad red sun has set,
But his rays are quivering yet
Through nature's veil of violet—
Streaming bright o'er lake and hill:
But earth and forest lie so still,
It sendeth to the heart a chill.
We start to check the rising fear,
'Tis beauty sleeping on her bier.

THE TORONTO WORLD AND MR. NEWETT'S LECTURES.

The Toronto World, commenting upon a notice which recently appeared in Peterboro' papers, announcing a lecture on "Secret Sin and the Pall Mall Gazette," to be delivered here by Mr. W. H. Newett, Secretary of the Manchester, England, Y. M. C. A., makes the following, at first sight not impertinent remarks:

"Now, while the World can see no objection to Mr. Newett or any other man lecturing, if he can only by legitimate means get sufficient people to listen to him to warrant the waste of the time, we cannot see what the Pall Mall Gazette's revelations have to do with us. We, like other people, undoubtedly, have our private vices, but they are sufficient evil of themselves, and have nothing to do with other people. If Mr. Newett fancies that by lecturing here in Canada on the aristocratic wickedness of England, he can do good, he is vastly mistaken. Without being either more or less religious than other peoples of the earth, the World can assure Mr. Newett that Canada has neither time nor inclination to ape the sins of the luxuriously lazy, and that the objects and aims of religion, as typified by the [illegible] Dominion by any discourses he may deliver "to men only," "to boys over 14," in the interests "of the Manchester social purity branch," and "for a silver collection."

A very little reflection, however, will convince regular readers of the World, and their name is legion, that the distressing defect in mental vision, which now prevents it from seeing "what the Pall Mall Gazette revelations have to do with us" must be an affliction of very recent date. It is only a few weeks since the World itself served up to its readers, "not men only" and "boys over fourteen," but to men, women and children of all ages, column upon column of the same detectable "revelations" without even the flimsy excuse "of the Manchester social purity branch," or the glittering inducement of a "silver collection." "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Port Hope Guide puts it rather neatly as follows:—"The Peterborough Times indirectly compares Mr. W. T. R. Preston, the Reform nominee of East Durham, to a load of hay. Perhaps this accounts for all the Conservative asses in the Province nibbling at him just at present."

Hon. Thomas White, the new Minister of the Interior, is exerting his personal influence in the interests of economy, as exercised by the Government. The Government have decided to economize in the management of the International Railway and they have begun by appointing two white men as porters to each Pullman car, where one man formerly did the work. And yet with such careful cheese-paring this road runs behind in expenses.

The Mail commends Mr. H. A. Ward, the Conservative candidate, to the electors of East Durham on the ground that he is "a man of large stake." That describes Mr. Ward exactly His "large stake" consists of a grab of 32,000 acres of timber limits in the North-West. Mr. Ward is a most promising politician of the Macdonaldite stripe. If he shows such expertness at the grab game as an amateur politician, what will he be when he becomes a professional, and profits by Sir John's advice? As a grabber he promises to take a leading place, when his talent has become fully developed. The electors of East Durham should take warning and be careful how they become responsible for the addition of another to the numerous band of self-seekers who are enriching themselves and their friends at the expense of the people.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

CONTRACT FINISHED.

The contractor for the Queen street sewer has finished his contract to the satisfaction of the committee appointed by the Council to overlook the work. A little grading etc., remains to be done by the corporation, and an extension from the main sewer to Clarin's corner, and the main street of Lakefield can boast of being as well drained as any village in Ontario.

OUR FAMOUS DAM.

We understand work will soon be resumed on the now notorious "Lakefield Dam," and as there is a prospect that it will be finished this fall it will put an end to all the "cuss" words and items both in public and the press.

CAMP YARN,

but a true story, which I had not time to give in my "camp notes" yesterday. A party from Lakefield, who have been up at Stony Lake for some days, were out one day last week picking huckleberries, on their return they determined to have a feast and one of the ladies undertook to prepare the dish for tea; a supply of cream was procured from a farm house (none of your town chalk and egg stuff) and with a liberal supply of white sugar, the dish was declared "fit for a King." the same old Scotch proverb that applied to the man that caught the fish and didn't, last week, applied here, as the first who partook of the tempting dish suddenly rolled up his eyes, dropped his spoon and in faint terms called for a doctor. The camp was all alarm for a few moments until it was discovered that the fair cook had used salt in place of sugar; then mirth reigned supreme. Later events seemed to prove that none of the members of the camp belonged to the church, as they did not know or remember the Eleventh Commandment, for as soon as the fun had subsided the mess was divided up, dispatched to some friends in neighbouring camps, there in some instances to cause a repetition of the scenes in camp number one, while others suspicious of the unusual generosity displayed, accepted their gift but were careful not to use them. Such is camp life!

COUNCIL MEETING.

The regular meeting of the village council was held in the council chamber on Monday evening, the 10th inst.

Present—Councillor McWilliams, in the chair, and Councillors Moore, Cox and Isbister.

Minutes of last regular meeting read and confirmed.

A number of communications were received and a largely signed petition requesting the council to accept Messrs. Poussette & Roger's offer and rent Mill Reserve No. 1 for a term of years.

Moved by Councillor Cox, seconded by Councillor Moore,—That the resignation of James Smith as village constable be and is hereby accepted.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor Isbister, seconded by Councillor Cox,—That old Mr. Murduff be granted the sum of five dollars as charity.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor Isbister, seconded by Councillor Moore,—That the petition of Mr. T. J. Nelson and others in reference to the lease of Mill Reserve No. 1 be held over for further consideration.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor Cox, seconded by Councillor Isbister,—That the drain committee be and are hereby empowered to order payment of the balance due to Isaac Watson, the contractor, when the work is completed to their satisfaction.—Carried.

Accounts amounting to $245.88 were ordered to be paid.

Moved by Councillor Cox, seconded by Councillor Isbister,—That the time mentioned in By-law No. 88, prohibiting the interment of the dead within the corporation, be extended until June 1st, 1886, and that the corporation seal be attached to this motion to give it the effect of a by-law.—Carried.

CAMP NOTES.

D. W. Dumble, Esq., Police Magistrate of Peterborough, is camped with his family on Gin Island.

Syndicate Island looks lost without the big tent this year, but "Sandy" is there as large as life, with a welcome to all.

Grassy Island is covered with tents, Port Hope, Millbrook, Peterborough, Lakefield, being well represented.

Sunday was a dull day for campers, the steady downfall of rain compelling all to remain close in their tents. Those who have built lodges were more comfortable, and entertained such of their less fortunate campers who ventured out.

Let some of your readers drive up here next Friday, and take the Cruiser at 8 a. m.; they will have all day up the lake, and can get home by 9:30 or 10 p. m.

Both boats are still crowded every trip, and this week larger additions will be made to the "floating population" on Stony Lake.

Sportsmen are beginning to brighten up arms, etc., in anticipation of "roast duck" next Saturday. They are said to be plentyful this year, but owing to the late season, "flappers" are numerous yet.

FROM COL. BOLTON.

The following reply has been received from Col. C. A. Boulton, (late commanding Boulton's Scouts, N. W. T.), acknowledging the address and handsome rifle, revolvers, etc., presented to him by his former friends in Lakefield:

RUSSELL, SHELL RIVER,
JULY 24th, 1885.

W. H. Casement, Esq., Secretary Committee, Lakefield, Ont.:

DEAR SIR,—I am proud to acknowledge the receipt of your letter and its accompanying testimonial; it did not need it to bring to my recollection my kind and honored friends of Lakefield, but I was taken by surprise when I read in the papers the account of your intention to present me with the rifle and revolvers which arrived yesterday.

You have referred to my gallantry in leading my men, but I cannot claim a recognition of anything more than an effort on my part to do my duty. It was a critical time in our history, the Government had undertaken to put down a serious rebellion by our own troops, and if ever a Canadian should feel a sense of duty in the face of the enemy it was on the occasion of this campaign, and I believe that spirit animated the whole of Gen. Middleton's forces and enabled him to nip in the bud a most serious outbreak of savage tribes. The only fault that could be found with the men was a want of experience, but individuality and intelligence made up for that, and undisciplined troops who could hold their ground and conquer under a very destructive fire possess qualities that we may all be proud of. In the whole campaign I did not see a man flinch, and I think, comparing the casualities with the number of men engaged, the list was a very large one. Of my 35 men I had at Fish Creek, eight were wounded—one mortally; and the rest of the troops suffered proportionately on that day.

By the gallantry of the whole of the troops Canada has been saved from what, under similar circumstances, in other countries, has resulted in prolonged and disastrous wars.

It has been good luck for those officers and men who have been fortunate enough to take part in such a memorable campaign, not excepting even those who found a soldier's grave, because it is an honored one, and I feel thankful for the privilege that was given me to raise a corps in my district which I knew would prove useful and effective, and to whose qualities the General has borne kindly testimony. It also shows you who are industriously building up a country already made in the east; that a vigorous population is developing in the far west, a country that will eventually prove a rich jewel among the gems of Canada.

While I had the honor of being your first Reeve, which you refer to, I have since then had the honor of founding a municipality here and can lay claim to being the pioneer settler of a magnificent district where 10,000 people are now located and who have just been vieing with one another in extending to us a warmth of welcome that would make every man a soldier from envy.

A good soldier never forgets his General and I would here desire to pay a tribute to him. I have no hesitation in saying that to Gen. Middleton's qualities as a soldier, the country and the troops owe a great deal; if troops are badly led they can never win, and General Middleton literally rode with the advance guard from Fort Q'Appelle to Fish Creek and Batoche, and from there to Loon Lake and Beaver River. He took nothing for granted, but personally ascertained the needed information for the success of his movements, and his judgment has never been at fault. He has been severely criticized by a portion of the press, but their criticisms have been unjust and in some cases untruthful, and I think hospitality should lead them to deal more generously with a soldier of 42 years experience who has given his service to the country, and who has bravely led our troops to victory over a valiant but misguided foe.

The honor you have conferred upon me in giving me a special mark of your kindly esteem and friendship will be preserved by me as an heirloom for my loved ones to whom you have so affectionately alluded.

I cannot close without a reference to the great loss we sustained in Captain Brown, in the charge of Batoche, who was formerly a near neighbor of yours. His troop lost a gallant officer, and I a warm friend. He is resting on the battlefield, on the banks of the Saskatchewan, and his men have subscribed $200 for the erection of a monument here to perpetuate his memory and that of their comrade, D'Arcy Baker. And if anything will make brave and willing soldiers in the future, it is the past sympathy which has been expressed all over the country, and your constant watchfulness over our welfare. Wishing Lakefield assured progress and prosperity, and again thanking you for your especial mark of honor, I remain,

Gratefully yours,
C. A. BOULTON.

[We omitted stating some time since that a change had taken place in our Lakefield correspondent, in consequence compliments or complaints are transferred to other shoulders. We take this opportunity of thanking our ex-correspondent for his kindness and punctuality in contributing to the EXAMINER for some time past, his regular valuable budget of news.—Ed. EXAMINER.]

Chapter VII—Continued.

For Ceneri had made no sign, nor has Macari sent his promised information. The latter, after his last malicious words, I dread more than I wish for. Teresa, who might have thrown some light on the subject, has disappeared. I blame myself for not having asked the doctor where she was to be found; but doubtless he would have declined to tell me. So the days go on. All I can do is, with Priscilla's assistance, to insure that my poor girl is made as happy as can be, and hope that time and care may at length restore her.

We are still at Walpole street. My intention has been to buy a house and furnish it. But why? Pauline could not look after it—would not be interested in it—it would not be home. So we stay on at my old lodgings and I live almost the life of a hermit.

I care to see no friends. I am, indeed, blamed for forsaking all my old acquaintances. Some who have seen Pauline attribute my lack of hospitality to jealousy; some to other causes; but, as yet, I believe no one knows the truth.

There are times when I feel I cannot bear my grief—times when I wish that Kenyon had never led me inside that church at Turin; but there are other times when I feel that, in spite of all, my love for my wife, hopeless as it is, has made me a better and even a happier man. I can sit for hours looking at her lovely face, even as I could looking at a picture or a statue. I try to imagine that face lit up with bright intelligence, as once it must have been. I long to know what can have drawn that dark curtain over her mind, and I pray that one day it may fall aside and I may see her eyes responsive to my own. If I felt sure this would ever be I would wait without a murmur, if needs be, till our hair has grown gray.

I have this poor consolation—whatever the effect of our marriage may have been upon my life, it has, at least, not made my wife's lot a sadder one. Her days I am sure must be brighter than those when she was under the supervision of that terrible old Italian woman. Priscilla loves her and pets her like a child whilst I—well, I do everything I can which I fancy may give her such pleasure as she is capable of feeling. Sometimes, not always, she seems to appreciate my efforts, and once or twice she has taken my hand and raised it to her lips as if in gratitude. She is beginning to love me as a child may love its father, as some weak helpless creature may love its protector. This is a poor recompense, but I am thankful even for this.

So, in our quiet household, the days pass by and the months glide away until the winter is over and the laburnums and lilacs in the little plots in front of houses in the suburbs are in bud.

It is fortunate that I am fond of books. Without that taste life would indeed be colorless. I have not the heart to leave Pauline alone and seek society on my own account. I spend many hours every day reading and studying, whilst my wife sits in the same room silent unless I address a remark to her.

It is a matter of great grief to me that I am almost entirely debarred from hearing the sound of music. I soon discovered that its effect upon Pauline was prejudicial. The notes which soothed me, in some way seemed to irritate her and make her uneasy. So, unless she is out somewhere with old Priscilla and I am alone, the piano is unopened; the music-books lie unused. Only those who love music as I love it can understand how great a deprivation this is to me.

One morning as I sat alone I was told that a gentleman wished to see me. He gave the servant no name, but instructed her to say that he was from Geneva. I knew it must be Macari. My first impulse was to send back word that I would not see him. Again and again, since our last meeting, his words had come back to me—those words which hinted at something in Pauline's past which her uncle had an object in concealing. But each time I thought of them I decided they were only the malicious insinuation of a disappointed man, who having failed to win the woman he loved, wished to make his favored rival suspicious and unhappy. I feared nothing he could say against my wife, but disliking the man, I hesitated before giving instructions for his admittance.

Yet Macari was the only link between Pauline and her past: Ceneri I felt sure I should never see again; this man was the only one remaining from whom it was possible to learn anything respecting my wife. The one person whose appearance could, by any chance, stimulate that torpid memory, and, perhaps, influence the state of her mind by suggesting, no matter how dimly, scenes and events in which he must have played a part. So thinking, I decided that the man should be admitted, and, moreover that he should be brought face to face with Pauline. If he wished to do so he might speak to her of old days, even old passion—anything that might aid her to pick up and retrace those dropped threads of memory.

He entered my room and greeted me with what I knew to be assumed cordiality. I felt, in spite of the hearty grasp he gave my hand, that he meant his visit to bode no good to me. What did I care why he came? I wanted him for a purpose. With this end in view, what mattered the tool, if I could keep it from turning in my hand and wounding me—and this was to be seen.

I met him with a greeting almost as cordial as his own; I begged him to be seated, then rang for wine and cigars.

"You see I have kept my promise, Mr. Vaughan," he said, with a smile.

"Yes. I trusted you would do so. Have you been long in England?"

"Only a couple of days."

"How long do you stay?"

"Until I am called abroad again. Things have gone wrong with us there. I must wait until the atmosphere has quieted down."

I looked at him inquiringly.

"I fancied you knew my trade," he said.

"I suppose you are a conspirator—I don't use the word offensively; it is the only one I can think of."

"Yes. Conspirator——regenerator—apostle of freedom, whatever you like."

"But your country has been free for some years."

"Other countries are not free. I work for them. Our poor friend Ceneri did the same, but his last day's work is done."

"Is he dead? I asked, startled.

"Dead to all of us. I cannot give you particulars; but a few weeks after you left Geneva he was arrested in St. Petersburg. He lay in prison for months awaiting his trial. It has come off, I hear."

"Well, what has happened to him?"

"What always happens—our poor friend is at this moment on his way to Siberia, condemned to twenty years hard labor in the mines."

Although I bore no particular love toward Ceneri, I shuddered as I heard his fate.

"And you escaped?" I said.

"Naturally, or I should not be here smoking your very good cigars and sipping your capital claret."

I was disgusted at the indifference with which he spoke of his friend's misfortune. If it seemed horrible to me to think of the man working in the Siberian mines, what should it have seemed to his fellow-conspirator?

"Now, Mr. Vaughan," said the latter, "with your permission I will enter on business matters with you. I am afraid I shall surprise you."

"Let me hear what you have to say."

"First of all I must ask you what Ceneri told you about myself?"

"He told me your name."

"Nothing of my family? He did not tell you my true name any more than he told you his own? He did not tell you it was March, and that Pauline and I are brother and sister?"

(To be Continued.)

Unreconciled.

Calm was the night in that still autumn weather,
And calmer still and colder were the twain
Who, parting then, might yet have kept together,
If pride had not been stronger even than pain.

There were no bitter tears, no sighs of sorrow,
No sad reproaches uttered at the end;
And, should they meet, years hence or on the morrow,
"Twill be with courteous ease, as friend meets friend.

Oh! mocking words for those who once loved madly,
Henceforth to be mere friends, not less, not more;
Deep in each heart a death-knell sounding sadly,
For love, deemed deathless, in glad days of yore.

Not more than friends; the voices must not falter,
Lest broken tones betray a vain regret;
And on the lips the forced smile must not alter
To show how, 'neath that mask, grief's lines are set.

Let them take heed, lest any word be spoken
To rouse some ghost from out the buried past;
Though the dear ties that bound them once are broken,
A strange spell lingers yet and holds them fast.

Not less than friends; but, ah! the friendship offered
Seems of such little worth, now love is done;
'Tis hard to take the hand thus coldly proffered
And feel the tender, thrilling touch has gone.

Gone with the day, when just one word was needed
Those heavy clouds of pride and doubt to lift;
But all in vain love's dying voice has pleaded;
Now far apart each lonely life must drift.

And she will never know, at their next meeting,
How hard he fought an outward calm to gain;
Nor will he see beneath the friendly greeting,
How her true heart still yearns to him through pain.

The Chinese Belle.

A Chinese belle is a curiosity to Chinamen, as well as to Christians. Even her own countrywomen look upon her with as much wonder and admiration. One reason of this is her rarity. Belles in China are rare birds of rare plumage. No ordinary community can afford the luxury of possessing more than one or two such dazzling charmers. As speech with the male sex is of course forbidden her, her features, eyes, cheeks, and silent lips must all be eloquent. Her skin must have great firmness of texture to endure the continual coating of white paste and vermillion paint which the laws of her being enjoin. Her feet must not exceed three inches in length, or one inch in breadth. The finger-nails of her last three fingers must be as long as the fingers. These last two points are the especial glory of Chinese fashion. Her daily life does not differ much from that of a lady of fashion in the days of Pepys or the younger Walpole. Suspicions of the morning mists, she never rises before noon. Breakfast is served in her own room by her servants. This languid meal over, she begins the serious business of her life. Hair by hair, supported by three or four hairdressers, she attacks the tangled locks in whose adornment she finds her chief pride. Both mistress and maids labor for three or four hours, with snatches of rest, and, thoroughly exhausted with their task, at 6 o'clock sit down to their dinner. Each province has its separate method of dressing the hair, eighteen in all, and the fashion of a woman's hair betrays her residence. The handsomest coiffure is worn by the women of Khan Lu, that boasts the beautiful cities of Son Chow and Shanghai. Strangely enough, the belle is the only woman in China who has a shadow of freedom. She is allowed to go to theatres, and even pay visits, with far less surveillance than her less favored sisters. There is something in the black patch which she wears next her left temple, or by the corner of her mouth, that checks any attempt at impropriety. A belle, of course, never walks, and rarely waddles, but is almost always borne in a sedan chair. She is, in short, in the language of the east, and through those silent windows can signal more persuasive arguments than fame with her hundred tongues.

—READ WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:—

COBOURG WORLD.—"We have seldom seen better binding."

PORT HOPE TIMES.—"We are surprised at the excellent workmanship, which could not be surpassed by any establishment in the Dominion."

LINDSAY POST.—"The binding was examined by a large number, and all were much pleased with the appearance and thoroughness with which the work had been executed.

WEST DURHAM NEWS.—"We had our books very neatly bound at the EXAMINER Bindery, and they are, in every particular, a credit to the establishment."

OMEMEE HERALD.—"We have received from the Peterborough EXAMINER Bookbindery our volumes of Picturesque Canada, bound in a most beautiful and lasting style. Persons who have examined the binding and general finish of the work, pronounce it equal, if not superior, to any work of the kind turned out of city binderies."

BOBCAYGEON INDEPENDENT.—"The workmanship is in every respect first-class, and of a lasting and wearing character, and handsome design."

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—South to westerly winds, mostly fair, warm weather, with local showers or thunder storms.

A Coming Athlete.

In the report of Monday's proceedings published in the EXAMINER the half mile race at the lacrosse grounds inadvertently escaped notice. The race, in which many of the visiting athletes competed, was won by the well known and popular James Sheehy, a stand-by of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club. No official time was taken, but gentlemen who held a watch on it say that it was fast enough to prove Jimmy an athlete of the first water. Mr. Sheehy was also successful in carrying off the laurels in a 100 yard dash at Riverside Park on Tuesday. "Shake Jimmy, you are the stuff."

The Story of a Wreck.

Mr. David Corneil, of Omemee, being in town yesterday, brought his horse and buggy to what he no doubt considered a snug berth and safe moorings at a hitching post near Dr. King's office. A squall of some kind, however, arose, and the animal swung around on his cable in some inscrutable manner and threw the buggy on its beam ends, the result being a general mixing and muddling of horses heels, buggy wheels and other incongruous elements, and a series of fractures and contusions to vehicular anatomy. The horse was with difficulty extricated from the confusion of wheels and whiffletree in which he had become involved, and the wrecked buggy taken to the yard of Messrs. Fitzgerald & Stanger for repairs.

Social Purity.

Mr. W. H. Newett, Secretary of the Social Purity Branch of the Manchester, England, Y. M. C. A., lectured in the Y. M. C. A. Hall last evening on "Secret Sin and the Pall Mall Gazette." There was an audience of from 75 to 100 men in the hall, none of whom were apparently under 17. Mr. Newett's lecture consisted of a brief outline of the causes which rendered necessary the investigation recently instituted by the P. M. G. followed by an exhortation to greater purity of life among those present and the spreading of purer principles of life among those whom they were acquainted. The sympathies of the meeting were evidently with the lecturer, and although the audience was not of the class who require reformation, they will no doubt be stimulated to effort in the direction of reclaiming others less thoughtful than themselves.

The Liberal Temperance Union.

Mr. C. Gordon Richardson of Toronto, an analytical chemist of some note, and Secretary of the Liberal Temperance Union, is in town taking the preliminary steps towards the formation of a branch of the Union here. The L. T. U. was originally started in Toronto by some gentlemen, who, while fully recognizing the fearful evils of intemperance, did not believe in the principles advocated by supporters of the Scott Act, and propose as an alternative the suppression of the more fiery liquors and the encouragement of light wines and beer, accompanied by the passage of stringent laws to prevent the adulteration of food products whether in a liquid or solid form. The Union numbers in its ranks many able speakers and advanced thinkers, among whom may be mentioned Prof. Goldwin Smith, Mr. J. Gordon Mowat (Moses Oates) and the gentleman now in town. Meetings held by them in Western Ontario have been largely attended and fruitful of argument, and certainly much food for reflection is furnished by them. If Mr. Richardson meets with the sympathy he seeks there will, no doubt, be meetings here ere long, at which the gentlemen mentioned will appear on the platform.

Curtis & Son's Brick and Tile Works.

Bricks for the Busy Builders—Tiles for the Tillers of the Soil.

A visit to the brick and tile yards of Messrs. Mark Curtis & Sons, Otonabee, is a most interesting one. Not only from the extent of the operations, but the fact that the thousands upon thousands of brick produced there find a ready and, in most cases, anticipated market in Peterborough. These works were established fourteen years ago, but ten years before that Mr. Curtis was in the business and furnished the brick for the new town offices, the Ontario Bank building, Simcoe street. When the present works were first started—14 years since—the output of the season was considered a big one if it amounted to 400,000. This season, however, the vast number of are made, or in process of manufacture, the great majority of which are demanded in Peterborough, in a great measure in anticipation of their readiness for the hands of the bricklayer.

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED THOUSAND BRICKS

M. Curtis & Sons' yards cover an extent of ten acres, and the supply of white and red clay is simply inexhaustible They have recently broken ground on a twelve acre clay bed south of the present works on the Ludgate property. This clay is for red brick, and possesses an excellent colour and great tenacity, and will produce splendid building brick.

The facilities of the firm enable them to turn out 20,000 brick per day. A stock brick machine, driven by steam, turns out 15,000 bricks daily, and is the chief dependence for this class of building material. These bricks are moulded, and have a fine face, perfect form and exact uniformity of size. The process of manufacture is familiar to all those interested in the trade, and no time need be spent in a detailed description. The readers' attention is, however, specially directed to the

put in operation this season chiefly for the manufacture of draining tiles. New tile sheds have been erected, 40x106 feet in size. At the south end is placed an excellent tile and brick machine, made by Leonard & Sons, London. This machine, which is run by a steam engine, works like a charm. It consists of a horizontal cylinder enclosing two screws working in an opposite direction to each other. The clay is placed in the hopper and the screws knead and work it to a proper consistency where a propeller forces it through the dies of the required size in a continuous tubular form. This is carried forward on a table supplied with rollers, and when a suitable length has been projected, a fine steel wire stretched on a revolving frame, cuts the tube into tiles of foot lengths. These are then removed and placed in the "hacks" to be dried ready for the kilns. The clay for these tiles is procured from a bed close at hand, and is the best for the purpose possible to obtain. The dies for different sizes of tile are respectively, 2½, 3, 4 and 6 inch, and the change from one size to another can be made in ten minutes, or the die for bricks can be adapted in the same space of time. The column of clay for this purpose, brick size, is forced out of the machine like the tile tubes, and cut into bricks in a similar manner. This machine is capable of making 3,000 tiles per day of the average sizes, and 5,000 bricks, which, added to the turn out of the stock machine, makes the daily product of bricks 20,000.

The tiles after being properly dried under cover are next burned and the result is a splendid tile, with the internal face or vore as smooth as a dinner plate, a most important matter when the unimpeded flow of the water is the chief desideratum. These tiles are all hard, tough and ring when struck like a dinner bell. They have been put to the test, several thousands having been sold already and the purchasers express their entire satisfaction with them and assert that they never used or saw better tile. The following names of several of these well-known farmers should be a strong endorsation of their merits :—Messrs. John Garbutt, Smith, Wm. Moore, Otonabee, Jos. Redmond, Otonabee, Thos. Milburn, Smith, Robert Jackson, Otonabee. Farmers in need of tile, which for underdraining by advanced farmers are coming yearly more into use, can secure from Messrs. Curtis & Son an unlimited supply. There are several thousands now corded up in their yards, and another kiln is being opened. It is expected that the output this year will be about 50,000. The prices for the different sizes are as follows :—2½ inch, $10 per M. ; 3 inch, $13 per M. ; 4 inch, $22 per M. ; 6 inch, $40 per M. These are the only sizes kept in stock ; other sizes, up to 12 inches are supplied to order.

EXTENT OF THE BUSINESS.

The indications given above show that the firm carries on an extensive business. They employ constantly forty men, requiring an average daily pay roll of $50 ; besides eight teams are constantly engaged in delivering brick in town.

Messrs. Curtis & Son are also rather extensive farmers, cultivating 200 acres of farm land and the same thoroughness that characterizes their manufacture of tile and brick marks their farming operations. They have just completed the threshing of 13 acres of Clawson wheat and the yield was 500 bushels, equal to the handsome average of a trifle over 38 bushels to the acre. Their other crops are equally promising, 18 acres of spring wheat, 35 of oats and 45 of hay.

Money for the Midlanders.

Capt. Burke, of "G" Company, has received the paysheets of his command for the period from July 24th up to July 31st, and requests members of "G" Company to call at the Oriental Hotel, Peterborough, between this evening and Friday evening, to sign their names to the pay roll for that period.

Our Visitors.

The streets are alive with music and visitors. A large number of excursionists from Brampton arrived with the lacrosse players at noon, and about half past twelve the excursion of the Ancient Order of United Workmen from Brockville, Smith's Falls and Perth, arrived. They were met at the station by a deputation of the Peterborough A. O. U. W., and, headed by the Fire Brigade Band, marched up George street to the drill shed, where dinner had been prepared for them. After dinner they were taken in tow by the Peterborough brethren and taken to the many points of interest that Peterboro' possesses. Their procession made a very fine appearance.

Personal.

Mr. John Bertram has returned home from Toronto and is camping with his sons on our back lakes.

Mr. S. Hughes, of the Lindsay Warder, paid us a visit to-day. Mr. Hughes is bound to work the Warder up to a state of perfection, and we wish him success.

Mr. A. F. Dick, of the Peel Banner, Brampton, came down with the six hundred Brampton excursionists to-day, and favored the EXAMINER with a friendly and fraternal call.

Dr. R. W. Bell left on Tuesday morning to attend the Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. at Hamilton, as representative of Otonabee Lodge, No. 13. Bro. Bell has since been appointed District Deputy Grand Patriarch for Mt. Hebron encampment, No. 56 Peterborough.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short ; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 14, 1885.

ATHLETICS.

Lines for Lacrosse Players.

The summary and crushing defeat at the hands of the Brampton Excelsiors, sustained yesterday afternoon by the Peterborough first twelve, should cause the members of that club to ask themselves what was the cause of this, the third Waterloo they have met during the present season. The men composing the twelve were, with little exception, the same who last year bore so high the banner of Peterborough's prowess on the lacrosse field, yet now they are found allowing the Excelsiors to lower their colors in three successive games in the unprecedentedly short time of five, one, and three and a half minutes.

The cause of the disaster is not far to seek. Although the home team in the first game played in the brilliant style that characterised them of old, and which has won them many a match, and certainly outplayed the visitors at every point, except, perhaps, the home, they were not in the state of high training required to sustain the exertion of a keenly contested match, and in the second and third games had to succumb to the superior condition of the visiting twelve with scarcely an effort to avert defeat. If the Peterborough's desire to regain and maintain the high position they once held, regularity at practice is the imperative duty of every member of the twelve; if they don't care to practice they had better at once cease playing.

The distance of the new grounds from town has doubtless much to do with the slackness in this respect, and it would be a wise step on the part of the management to make arrangements for practice in Riverside Park, at least three evenings in the week. Another cause of this neglect of practice, perhaps, is the want of an incentive in the shape of more frequent matches. The dispute between the Beaverton and Orillia clubs in regard to the championship will be decided on the 19th of the present month, and as a challenge from Peterborough has already been deposited, the club then declared the holder of the championship will be compelled to meet Peterborough two weeks afterwards in defence of it. The chance of winning back this coveted honor should surely be an incentive strong enough to induce the self-denial of going into training, and admirers of lacrosse in Peterborough look to the boys to retrieve their lost laurels and prove themselves the boys of yore by proudly bearing back to Peterborough this enviable distinction.

Lacrosse.

THE PETERBOROUGH FIRST TWELVE BEATEN BY BRAMPTON.

Fond hopes that the Peterboroughs would come to the front and renew the of late somewhat tarnished lustre of their star by defeating the redoubtable Excelsiors of Brampton, attracted a rather large gathering to the lacrosse grounds yesterday afternoon, and when the teams appeared on the field, a respectably large crowd was present in the grand stand and other parts of the grounds, the liberal sprinkling of brilliant color betokening the presence among them of many of the fair sex, anxious, doubtless, to see their brothers and sweethearts do doughty deeds. The weather was delightful, and the Streetsville band, which, by the way, is no slouch among bands, furnished a musical programme that much enhanced the pleasure of the afternoon.

When the teams were drawn up in line they were seen to be as follows:

Peterboroughs.		Bramptons.
Joyal	Goal	Ashenhurst
Miles	Point	Roberts
Tierney	Cover Point	G. Peaker
Halpin	Defence Field	Main
Hartley	" "	James
Kelly	" "	Milliner
Sheehey	Centre	Fallis
Henderson	Home Field	Chisholm
Scott	" "	Nichol
Rudkins	" "	Joyce
Rutherford	Home	T. Peaker
Hall	"	Charters
Coughlin	Field Captain	R. Blair
Sam English	Umpire	J. Pratt

Mr. Harry Le Brun acted as referee.

THE MATCH.

Sheehy and Fallis faced about 3 o'clock, Jimmy getting the best of it, and the rubber at once bounded away towards the Brampton goal, where a throw was made that barely missed its mark. After some play behind the flags a Brampton man emerged from a scuffle with the ball and threw it down to centre, where it was promptly met and sent whirling Bramptonwards by the agile Dick Kelly. Little Henderson was on to it like a mass, but could not find a passage for it, and after a little wrestle it again fell into Kelly's ever-alert keeping and was once more transferred from him to Henderson. The play was sharp, clean lacrosse, and the home men certainly looked like winners. A Bramptonite again made a throw to centre, and this time Fallis caught it cleverly, but it passed from his 'crosse into that of Tierney's, who again transferred the scene of action to the vicinity of the visitors' flags. The attack was again repulsed as far as centre, but once more the ubiquitous Kelly returned it to the attack, where the equally irrepressible Henderson again handled it, and the mimic warfare for a time raged round the enemies stronghold. The rubber was now gradually worked down to the home goal, and, the defence being somewhat scattered, was put through by Tom Peaker, of the Bramptons. Time, 5 minutes. Throughout the whole of this game the Peterboroughs outplayed the Excelsiors, although perhaps the weakness, that in the subsequent games became manifest, had something to do with the way in which the goal was so suddenly lost.

Of the second and third games, save that Sheehy got the best of the face each time, least said soonest mended. They lasted respectively one minute and three and a half minutes, and from what could be seen the home men were completely tuckered out and without an ounce of wind in them. A quick rush of the visitors, the home defence men scattered, cover point evaded, point keeled over, the rubber through, and the Bramptons yelling like demons, that's all there was about it, and enough, too, in all conscience, of the same kind.

The Juniors Whitewash Perth.

The first twelve and the Excelsiors had no sooner left the field than the juniors and the Perth club took up their stations in the following order:—

PETERBOROUGH.		PERTH.
Phelan	Goal	Holmes
Hall	Point	Kelloch
Annan	Cover Point	Phillips
Canning	Defence	King
Rose	"	Beale
Larone	"	Glossop
Traynor	Centre	James
McAvelia	Home Field	Moore
T. Giroux	"	Baird
J. Begley	Home	Richardson
R. Begley	"	Clarke
Neil	"	McKercher
R. H. Fortye	Field Captain	E. Stewart
S. English	Umpire	J. Dodds

On the ball being faced the Peterborough defence were placed on their mettle and quickly proved themselves "the men for Galway," by sending the rubber on a lightning express trip in the direction of Perth. The play during the game was all over the field, and it was a case of pull devil, pull baker, for some time, but the superior activity and skill of the Peterborough boys told, and in five minutes Giroux had placed the first goal to the credit of his team.

The second game, which only lasted two minutes, resulted similarly, Harry Neil putting the rubber through after a little play, in which the Peterborough flags were never seriously menaced.

The third game lasted somewhat longer, the visitors making a strenuous, but abortive, effort to avert the impending three straights, which, however, were compassed by McAvelia sending the ball spinning between the flags, after 11 minutes of hard playing.

The juniors are to be congratulated, the visiting team being fully a third heavier than them; indeed, when the teams were drawn up on the field the disparity in size was so marked as to cause much comment.

Peterborough's Prime Cheese.

An Adjourned Market Which Resulted in Large Sales.

An adjourned cheese market was held yesterday afternoon in the town hall, Mr. Drummond, President, in the chair, and business being conducted by the secretary, Mr. Warren Taylor. The following buyers were in attendance:—J. D. Flavelle, Lindsay; Cook, Belleville, (Warrington,) and Messrs. Cluxton, Green and Wrighton, town. The Liverpool cable quotation was given as 37s. The following are the factories represented and the quantities offered for sale by them:

Trewerne	c	275
Woodlawn	w	160
Norwood	c	200
South Dewro	w	57
Myrtle	c	165
Lakehurst	w	50
Cherry Grove	c	71
North Smith	c	220

Lakefield also boarded 185 boxes, but was unrepresented. Mr. J. W. Flavelle bought the Myrtle, Trewerne and North Smith product, amounting to 601 boxes, at 7¼ cents, and Mr. Cluxton purchased 478 boxes at 7¼ cents.

Perth vs. Peterborough.

Amidst other attractions yesterday, not the least was a cricket match between the above clubs. Perth has acquired this season more than a local reputation and it was confidently expected that they would give a good account of themselves in this town. Although they played admirable cricket their efforts were not entirely successful.

The first innings of Peterborough totalled 78 runs, the smallness of which score was due to the excellent trundling of Bert and Balderson. Of these runs Giroux piled together 14 in a lively manner, Max Hamilton 20 by good conduct, and Miles Hamilton 12 in easy style.

The ... of Perth in their first innings amounted to 56 runs, Balderson and McKinley only entering double figures. The batting of Perth was a little stiff and not as free and easy as is their general custom, owing partly no doubt to the liveliness of the ground.

In their second innings they were even more unfortunate, consummating only 33 runs. The bowling of Norley and Hamilton was especially good in this innings and deserves mention. The balance of the runs necessary to a victory for Peterborough were made at an expense of one wicket. The following is the score:—

Excellent Music.

The Streetsville cornet band which came down yesterday with the Brampton excursionists, in the evening treated Mr. Roddy and the public to a delightful serenade. They played the overture from Verdi's Attila, with excellent effect. The good time, harmony and delicacy of shading were particularly noticable. If the band were balanced with a few Reed instruments it would be an improvement.

A Sleeping Beauty.

Martin Henry, a rustic, attracted to town by the circus yesterday, seems to have compassed too much of the unwholesome concoction of red ink and rasberry vinegar, known as circus lemonade, for at a late hour last night he was discovered by P. C. McGinty in a recumbent position and state of coma, and was removed by the officer to safe quarters in the town cooler. When called upon for an explanation at the police court this morning, the erring agriculturalist stated that he had been up all the previous night hunting stray cows, and as somnolence is nowhere described as a statutory offence, was allowed to depart in peace to his rural home.

Belleghem's Circus.

A great many people who had secured advantageous points in Peterborough windows yesterday in the hope of seeing the Doris procession pass by, were much disappointed on finding that it would not enter the town. They were not, however, doomed to utter disappointment, Belleghem, the enterprising furniture dealer, having improvised a little procession of his own, which would have done no discredit to the veteran Doris himself. On a flat waggon he had placed several people, who were engaged in various occupations connected with the cabinet-making industry, while enthroned in state on a huge rocking chair, drinking in the grateful breeze raised by the automatic chair fan, was seated the great and only original John Smith, who, arrayed in his most baloon-like breeches and Brobdignagian boots, and crowned with a glossy silk hat, had been specially engaged for the occasion at at an enormous expense. The show paraded all the leading streets and created much merriment wherever it appeared. Mr. Belleghem being a philanthropist as well as an advertiser, had hoped that "the original," on receiving remuneration for his share of the entertainment, would expend it in transporting himself and his belongings to Hamilton; but, alas for frail human nature. A few hours after Smith had become the possessor of the V. which constituted his fee, he was observed in a state of beastly intoxication, staggering in and out of the George street gutter, and when the shades of evening fell on our fair town, is believed to have been lying in a back lane, protected from the pelting rain only by the broad spread of canvas that his abnormal trousers presented, and sleeping the sleep, not of the innocent, but the intoxicated idler.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Personal.

Mr. A. S. Manhard, travelling passenger agent of the C.P.R., is at the Grand Central.

Mr. J. R. McIntyre, of the Oriental hotel, leaves town for a visit to Nebraska, where he is interested in a hotel venture, to-morrow morning. He will return in a few weeks.

Mr. A. H. Clegg, who has been spending some time in Europe, having finished his continental tour, sailed in the Parisian yesterday for home.

Mr. H. A. Rubidge, an official of the Chicago and Illinois R. R., a brother of Mr. Geo. Rubidge, tobacconist, is visiting in town.

Mr. Harry Armstrong, formerly a member of the 57th Battalion band, is leader of the band of Doris' circus.

Burleigh Falls.

(From a Correspondent.)

Mr. Robert White, of Peterborough, has brought instructions from that town to the manager of Mr. Geo. Goodwin's contract at this place, to engage a full complement of men necessary to complete the contract at this point. From this it may be assumed that the government has made satisfactory arrangements with Mr. Goodwin and that this little piece of Trent Talley Navigation will be finished.

The Poets and Poetry of Canada.

[No. 11.]

Mrs. Susanna Moodie.

Another of her poetical productions entitled "Canada," is well worthy of remembrance. It is a prophetic vision of her future destiny and here are a few of its stirring lines :—

By thy winter's stainless snow,
Starry heavens of purer glow ;
Glorious summers, fervid, bright,
Basking in one blaze of light ;
By thy fair, salubrious clime ;
By the scenery sublime ;
By thy mountains, streams and woods ;
By thy everlasting floods ;
If greatness dwells beneath the skies,
Thou to greatness shall arise !

Dewart says of our authoress : " Although much better known as a writer of prose, than as a poet, yet many of her poems display great naturalness and purity of style, and a genuine love of nature in her varied phases, which qualifies her to describe natural scenery with natural truthfulness." One of her best known poems is "The Sleigh Bells." She tells us it was written on the open door of her shanty, while watching for the return of her husband. There are several versions of the song, as we may term it, in existence and it has been set to music. In the United States, as well as in Canada, it is a general favorite. We give it in full :—

THE SLEIGH-BELLS.

'Tis merry to hear, at evening time,
By the blazing hearth the sleigh-bells chime :
To know the bounding steeds bring near
The loved one to our bosom dear.
Ah, lightly we spring the fire to raise,
Till the rafters glow with the ruddy blaze ;
Those merry sleigh-bells, our hearts keep time
Responsive to their fairy chime.
Ding-dong, ding-dong, o'er vale and hill,
Their welcome notes are trembling still.
'Tis he, and blithely the gay bells sound,
As his sleigh glides over the frozen ground ;
Hark ! he has passed the dark pine-wood.
He crosses now the ice-bound flood,
And hails the light at the open door
That tells his toilsome journey's o'er.
The merry sleigh-bells ! My fond heart swells
And throbs to hear the welcome bells ;
Ding-dong, ding-dong, o'er ice and snow,
A voice of gladness, on they go.
Our hut is small, and rude our cheer,
But love has spread the banquet here ;
And childhood springs to be caressed
By our beloved and welcome guest.
With a smiling brow his tale he tells,
The urchins ring the merry sleigh-bells ;
The merry sleigh-bells, with shout and song
They drag the noisy string along ;
Ding dong, ding-dong, the father's come
The gay bells ring his welcome home.

From the cedar swamp the gaunt wolves howl,
From the oak loud whoops the felon owl ;
The snowstorm sweeps in thunder past,
The forest creaks beneath the blast ;
No more I list, with boding fear,
The sleigh-bells' distant chime to hear.
The merry sleigh-bells with soothing power
Shed gladness on the evening hour.
Ding-dong, ding-dong, what rapture swells
The music of those joyous bells !

We should much like to quote " Quebec," a very fine description of the queen fortress of the west ; "The Maple-Tree," a clever poem of six verses, which has a splendid ring, and does full justice to the " pride of the forest," and the emblem of Canada, and " The Canadian Volunteers," written during the troublous times of 1837, and widely circulated by the loyalists, but to do so would greatly exceed our space, and we must forbear.

In order to interest our readers, (especially promoters of the Trent Valley Canal) to Mrs. Moodie's works for themselves, not help adding a verse or two of her poem, on

THE OTONABEE.

I love thee lonely river !
Thy hollow restless roar,
Thy cedar-girded shore ;
The rocky isles that sever,
The waves that round them pour.

Katchawanook * basks in light,
But thy currents woo the shade
By the lofty pine-trees made,
That cast a gloom like night,
Ere day's last glories fade.

Thy solitary voice
The same bold anthem sung
When nature's frame was young.
No longer shall rejoice
The woods where er'st it rung.

Lament, lament, wild river !
A hand is on thy mane
That will bind thee in a chain,
No force of thine can sever.
Thy furious headlong tide,
In murmurs soft and low,
Is destined yet to glide
To meet the lake below ;
And many a bark shall ride
Securely on thy breast,
To waft across the main,
Rich stores of golden grain
From the valleys of the west.

* Katchawanook is the Indian name for the expansion of the Otonabee just above Lakefield.

Poor Ammunition.

At a meeting of the competitors at the Quebec Rifle Association in Montreal, it was resolved to send a memorial to the Minister of Militia, complaining that the ammunition of the Dominion of Canada manufacture was not up to the mark, and was very unsatisfactory.

TRANSPORT BUNGLING.

It would appear that not only was the transport of supplies in the North-West trouble miserably bungled and mismanaged, but the transport of the troops themselves was exceedingly unsatisfactory and discreditable to the Militia Department and the Government. The public is familiar with the terrible suffering the troops had to endure in passing the now historical gaps. In a minor degree, however, the returning troops were subjected to outrageous indignities and almost criminally indifferent treatment. When about three thousand home-coming troops, consisting of the Midland, Royal Grenadiers, Queen's Own, 90th and 65th regiments arrived at Grand Rapids, the point at which the Saskatchewan empties into Lake Winnipeg, they found awaiting to transport them a steam tug, another little steamer and three barges. The steamer and tug were assigned to the field officers, while the company officers and men were put on the barges. The officers, of course, took the most comfortable places on the deck of the latter. (The barges were decked over and consisted below of a huge [illegible] into these the privates were thrust indiscriminately like so many swine. The space assigned each company of 42 men was 12 square feet or about 41 square inches to a man. The result was that the men experienced the horrors of the Black-hole of Calcutta and of the hold of a slaver in the good old slave trading days. This condition of things the poor penned-up soldiers had to endure for about 50 hours, or while a voyage of 320 miles was being made to Selkirk. These facts, we believe, have not before been published, and they are only another instance of the happy-go-lucky character of the Government's treatment of the brave lads, who saw service in the North-West. The transport officers were greatly to blame for having accepted the miserably insufficient transport facilities provided by the Transport Company. The suspicion can hardly be resisted that there was an understanding between them. On no other ground can it be explained why accommodation for barely 1,000 men was accepted as sufficient for about 3,000. And no doubt the transport company were fully paid for furnishing adequate accommodation. That such a state of things could be, reflects strongly on the Government, who throughout the whole campaign showed a lamentable disregard for the comfort and individual well-being of the men. A body of men of less sterling stuff, then our volunteers would not have been able to accomplish what they have done under the circumstances and conditions. When revelations of so astonishing a character respecting the transport service of both supplies and troops, leak out, what may be expected should an investigation reveal the whole damaging truth in the premises ?

"He cometh not," she said."
He never comes who ships ring and loving call
I waited long to hear.
But thou hast come, last Messenger of all,
A friend well nigh as dear!

Peace—if not joy!—yet peace itself were gain,
That must supremely bless
The soul sore traveled thus in vain, in vain
Hungered for happiness!

Draw closer, O, thou voiceless Guest and pale,
Whose drooping torch burns low;
Thy face is hid, but through the somber veil
Thine eyes' dark light I know!

Nay, closer still!—I yearn on brow and heart
Thy cool, strong hand to feel;
Fevered with wounds' and throbbing with a smart
Thy touch alone can heal.

I go with joy! Lead me to him at last,
How dim the path and lone—
Him, whose far footsteps, echoing through the past,
Have never met mine own.
—Stuart Sterne, in the Century.

Chased by Wolves.

The following narrative, related by an old merchant named Nicolai, is the story of his own fearful ride on the first day of a long journey to Moscow with his wife. After a description of the inevitable preliminaries—the first yelp, the louder answering howls, and the appearance of the murderous pack in full pursuit, his sudden arming, resigning the reins to his wife—he goes on:

The terrified horses were now in a mad gallop, their hard panting mingling with the quick breathing of the wolves, now so near that I could distinctly hear it. I waited till the foremost of them were within a few yards, and then fired. The leader of the pack rolled over upon the snow.

Again I discharged my weapon, and another wolf fell. Immediately the rest of the pack fell upon their slaughtered comrades, and tore them to pieces and devoured them. This gained us a minute or two of time, but on they came again.

Again and again I fired and killed, and again, after a brief delay, the wolves overtook us as before. In this way I discharged all the barrels of my two revolvers. At the last shot my wife cried:

"I see the lights of the village fire, Nicolai: shall soon be there. Throw out the package."

The sledge was laden with samples; and it was hard, I confess, to toss over all my small bales and parcels to the wolves. But there was no help for it, and by the time the whole freight was on the snow the speed of our pursuers had been considerably checked.

Another encouraging cry from my wife, who held firmly to the reins, her eyes fixed on the village now in sight. She did not realize that I had exhausted my last resource. No, not quite my last.

I still had my knife. I drew it, and stood ready as the pack rushed on again leaving the torn bundles on the snow. A wolf sprang at me like an arrow, and I struck him with the knife. The blood spurted on my cheek as I flung the dying brute from me. Another leaped at my hand, and was received as his fellow on the same deadly point.

But the hard "hand-to-hand" fighting could not last long. I was nearly exhausted by my exertions. Thrusting out, to repel a fresh attack, my hand missed its aim, and with a horrible confusion in my head, I sank down in the bottom of the sledge, grasping a huge wolf by the throat. I just heard my wife's words faintly as in a dream: "We are saved, Nicolai? husband! We are saved!" and then I lost consciousness.

I afterward learned that the villagers, at our approach, rushed out with guns, and the wolves fled. "In another second," said my wife, "the brute in the sledge would have done his fatal work."—A Year in Russia.

MISCELLANEOUS.

"Buckle my shoe, Egbert, dear," said a Chicago belle to her near-sighted fiancee. Egbert went down on his knee like a true knight, but, as he had lost his eye-glass, his vision was a little uncertain. "Is this your foot, darling?" he inquired. "You bet," she said. "Aw, pawdon, I—I thought it was the lounge." Egbert is now disengaged.—Texas Siftings.

A New York physician reports a case of wall-paper poisoning—the persons who slept in the papered room having contracted "catarrh, pharyngitis, migraine, conjunctivities, muscular pains, and swelling of the salivary glands." It must have made 'em sick; but they are lucky that the wall-paper didn't also give them ingrowing nails, bunions, and strabismus. — Norristown Herald.

"Father," said a young son of Deacon Squibbs, "what is the difference between a man that dies woolen lambs and a New York editor?" "Well now, really, my son," beaming benignly on his onspring; "I am not prepared to state. What is the difference?" "Why, pa, one is a lamb dyer, and the other a —" "What! what! my son!" "New York editor," continued the youth rolling his tongue around in his cheek.

Mrs. Langtry is said to have introduced the song, "Go to Sleep, My Baby," in her performance of Lady Teazle. The innovation seems to have proved popular with London audiences, so we may soon expect Romeo to warble "Over the Garden Wall" to his Juliet, and the Ghost of Hamlet's father will close his remarks to his son with the effective little ballad, "See That My Grave's Kept Green."

The ancient Egyptians were a peculiar people. When a fire broke out they cared for nothing but the safety of their cats and were terribly afflicted if one of them fell a victim to the flames. A dozen cats might howl "Sweet Violets" and other gems of song in a backyard until 3 a. m. and not a single bootjack or shaving-cup would be found in the enclosure the next day.—Norristown Herald.

Dog parties are quite the fashion at present. The belles of upper tendom meet at each other's houses, bringing their little favorites with them. The conversation on such occasions is most instructive. "Dear, dear!" exclaimed a charming blonde at one of these intellectual gatherings the other day, "what a horrid little doggie mine is!" "What has he done?" "Why he has eaten up the pretty little sealskin sacque I had made him for this winter." Chorus of fair ones, "The bad, bad doggie!"

Chapter VII—Continued.

I was astonished at this announcement. In the face of the doctor's assertion that this man had been in love with Pauline, I did not for a moment believe it; but thinking it better to hear his tale out, I simply replied, "He did not."

"Very well—then I will tell you my history as briefly as I can. I am known by many names abroad, but my right name is Anthony March. My father and Pauline's married Dr. Ceneri's sister. He died young, and left the whole of his large property to his wife, absolutely. She died some time afterward, and in turn left everything in my uncle's hands as sole trustee for my sister and myself. You know what became of the money, Mr. Vaughan?"

"Dr. Ceneri told me," I said, impressed in spite of myself by the correct way in which he marshaled his facts.

"Yes, it was spent for Italy. It paid for the keep of many a red shirt, armed many a true Italian. All our fortune was spent by the trustee. I have never blamed him. When I knew where it had gone I freely forgave him."

"Let us say no more about it, then."

"I don't quite look upon it in that light. Victor Emmanuel's government is now firmly established. Italy is free, and will grow richer every year. Now, Mr. Vaughan, my idea is this. I believe, if the facts of the case were laid before the king, something might be done. I believe, if I, and you on behalf of your wife, were to make it known that Ceneri's appropriation of our fortunes for patriotic purposes had left us penniless, a large portion of the money, if not all, would be freely returned to us. You must have friends in England who would assist you in gaining the ear of King Victor. I have friends in Italy. Garibaldi, for instance, would vouch for the amount paid into his hands by Dr. Ceneri."

His tale was plausible, and, after all, his scheme was not altogether visionary.

I was beginning to think he might really be my wife's brother, and that Ceneri had, for some purpose of his own, concealed the relationship.

"But I have plenty of money," I said.

"But I have not," he replied, with a frank laugh. "I think you ought for the sake of your wife to join me in the matter."

"I must take time to consider it."

"Certainly—I am in no hurry. I will in the meantime get my papers and petition in order. And now may I see my sister?"

"She will be in very shortly if you will wait."

"Is she better, Mr. Vaughan?"

I shook my head sadly.

"Poor girl! then I fear she will not recognize me. We have spent very few days together since we were children. I am, of course, much her senior; and from the age of eighteen have been plotting and fighting. Domestic ties are forgotten under such circumstances."

I was still far from putting any faith in the man; besides, there were his words on a former occasion to be accounted for.

"Mr. Macari," I said.

"Excuse me—March is my name."

"Then, Mr. March, I must ask you now to tell me the particulars of the shock which deprived my wife of her full reason."

His face grew grave. "I cannot now. Some day I will do so."

"You will then, at least, explain your words when we parted at Geneva?"

"I will ask pardon for them and apologize, as I know I spoke hastily and thoughtlessly, but having forgotten, I am, of course unable to explain them."

I said nothing, feeling uncertain whether he was playing a deep game with me or not.

"I know," he continued, "that I was furious at hearing of Pauline's marriage. In her state of health Ceneri should never have allowed it—and then, Mr. Vaughan, I had set my heart upon her marrying an Italian. Had she recovered, my dream was that her beauty would win her a husband of the highest rank."

Any reply I should have made was prevented by the entrance of Pauline. I was intensely anxious to see what effect the appearance of her so-called brother would have upon her.

Macari rose and stepped toward her. "Pauline," he said, "do you remember me?"

She looked at him with eyes full of curious wonder, but shook her head as one in doubt. He took her hand. I noticed that she seemed to shrink from him instinctively.

"Poor girl, poor girl!" he said. "This is worse than I expected Mr. Vaughan. Pauline, it is long since we have met, but you cannot have forgotten me!"

Her large troubled eyes were riveted on his face; but she made no sign of recognition.

"Try and think who it is, Pauline," I said.

She passed her hand across her forehead, then once more shook her head. "Non mi ricordo," she murmured; then, as if the mental effort had exhausted her, sank, with a weary sigh, upon a chair.

I was delighted to hear her speak in Italian. It was a tongue she seldom used unless compelled to do so. That she employed it now showed me she must, in some dim way, connect the visitor with Italy. It was to me a new gleam of hope.

There was another thing I noticed. I have said how seldom it was that Pauline raised her eyes to any one's face; but to-day, during the whole time Macari was in the room, she never looked away from him. He sat near her, and after a few more words to her, addressed his remarks exclusively to me. All the while I could see my wife watching him with an eager, troubled look; several times, indeed, I almost persuaded myself that there was an expression of fear in her eyes. Let them express fear, hate, trouble, even love, so long as I could see the dawn of returning reason in them! I began to think that if Pauline was to be restored, it would be through my visitor.

So when he took his leave I pressed him, with no assumed manner, to call again very soon—to-morrow, if possible. He readily promised to do so, and we parted for the day.

I can hope he was as satisfied with the result of our interview as I was.

After his departure Pauline fell into a restless state. Several times I saw her pressing her hand to her forehead. She seemed unable to sit still. Now and again she went to the window and looked up and down the street. I paid no attention to her actions, although once or twice I saw her turn her eyes toward me with a piteous, imploring glance. I believed that something—some old memory in connection with Macari—was striving to force itself to her clouded brain, and I looked forward with impatience to to-morrow, when he would pay us another visit. The man had something to get out of me, so I felt certain I should see him again.

He came the next day, and the next, and many other days. It was clear he was determined to ingratiate me, if possible. He did all he could to make himself agreeable, and I must say he was, under the present circumstances, very good company. He knew, or professed to know, all the ins and outs of every plot or political event of the last ten years, and was full of original anecdotes and stirring experiences. He had fought under Garibaldi through the whole of the Italian campaign. He had known the interior of prisons, and some of his escapes from death had been marvelous. I had no reason to doubt the truth of his tales, although I mistrusted the man himself. Let his smile be as pleasant as he could make it—let his laugh ring naturally—I could not forget the expression I had seen on that face, or his manner and words on former occasions.

I took care that Pauline should always be with us. It was the only wish of mine the poor child had ever shown even a mute disinclination to comply with. She never spoke in Macari's presence, but her eyes were scarcely ever turned from him. He seemed to have a kind of fascination for her. When he entered the room I could hear her sigh, and when he left it she breathed a breath of relief; and every day she grew more restless, uneasy, and, I knew, unhappy. My heart smote me as I guessed I was causing her pain; but, at all cost, I determined to persevere. I felt that the crisis of her life was fast drawing near.

One evening, after dinner, as Macari and I sat over our claret, and Pauline, with her troubled eyes fixed, as usual, on my guest, was reclining on the sofa a little way off, he began to relate some of his military adventures. How once, when in imminent peril—his right arm broken and useless at his side, his left arm not strong enough to wield the rifle with the bayonet fixed—he had taken the bayonet off, and holding it in his left hand, had driven it through the heart of an antagonist. As he described the deed, he suited the gesture to the word, and seizing a knife which lay on the table, dealt a downward blow through the air at an imaginary white-coated Austrian.

I heard a deep sigh behind me, and, turning, I saw Pauline lying with her eyes closed, and apparently in a dead faint. I ran to her, raised her up, and carrying her to her room, laid her on her bed. It was now about nine o'clock. Priscilla happened to be out, so I ran back to the dining-room and bade Macari a hasty good-night.

"I hope there is not much the matter," he said.

"No; only a fainting fit. Your fierce gesture must have frightened her."

Then I returned to my wife's bedside, and began the usual course of restoratives. Yet without success. White as a statue she lay there, her soft breathing and the faint throb of her pulse only telling that she was alive. She lay there without sense or motion, whilst I chafed her hands, bathed her brow, and endeavored to recall her to life. Even whilst doing so my heart was beating wildly. I felt that the moment had come; that something had brought back the past to her, and that the fierce rush with which it came had overpowered her. I could scarcely dare to put my wild belief in words, but it was that when Pauline again opened her eyes they would shine with light which I had never known in them—the light of perfectly restored intelligence. A wild, mad idea, but one I had the fullest faith in.

So it was that I did not send for a doctor; that a. er awhile I gave up my own attempts to awaken consciousness; that I resolved to let her lie in that calm, senseless state until she awoke of her own accord. I took her wrist between my fingers that I might feel every beat of her pulse. I laid my cheek against hers that I might catch the sound of every breath—and thus I waited until Pauline should awake, and, as I fondly believed, awake in her right mind.

She remained in this state for at least an hour. So long that at last I began to get frightened, and think I must, after all, send for medical aid. Just as I was forming the resolution to do so, I noticed the beats of her pulse grow stronger and more rapid; I felt her breath drawn deeper; I saw a look of returning life steal over her face; and, in breathless impatience, I waited.

And then Pauline—my wife—came back to life—she rose in the bed and turned her face to mine; and in her eyes I saw what, by the mercy of God, I shall never again see there!

The language of letter-seals is the latest. A seal of pink wax means congratulations; one of black, condolence; of blue, love; of purple, friendship; of red, business, and an invitation to a wedding or other festivity is sealed with white wax.

An entry in Washington's diary, dated February, 1768, shows the great number of visitors he entertained at that time. "Would any person believe," he says, "that with 101 cows actually reported at a late enumeration of my cattle I should still be obliged to buy butter?"

Five out of the twenty-one Presidents of the United States were of Scotch-Irish lineage—Jackson, Polk Buchanan, Johnson and Arthur; two of Scotch—Grant and Hayes; one of Welsh—Jefferson, and one of Dutch—Van Buren, the remaining twelve being of English descent.

A Highway of Notable Landmarks.

That thoroughfare known in early days as the Calzada de Tacuba, which was bordered in part almost from the city gate, where once stood the palace of Montezuma, occupied by Cortes and his little band, past the venerable church of San Hipolito and the spot pointed out as the scene of Alvarado's miraculous leap; still further on to Popotla with its poetical and romantic memories clustering around the tree of the Noche Triste, and Tacuba, with its Church of Our Lady of Remedies—the shrine of her who was the presiding divinity of the Conquest—and finally to the Indian village of Azteapotzalco, in primitive times the flourishing seat of one of the most important tribes that dwelt in the valley of the Anahuac. No history or more striking index could be furnished for the illustration of certain periods in Mexican history than this picturesque highway, which destiny seems to have decreed shall remain a perpetual heritage to the original owners of the soil; for, after a lapse of centuries, and in spite of the strange vicissitudes of fate, the same race that in the days of Montezuma was wont to frequent the Calzada of Tabuca may still be seen thronging that locality, which one might imagine to be haunted by the names of their ancestors.

The Daily Examiner.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 14, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Fire Brigade Band

at the Lansdowne Roller Rink to-night.

They Didn't Want To.

After the Excelsiors had downed the Peterboroughs in three straights yesterday afternoon one of them remarked to Mr. Harry LeBrun that it was too bad they were not playing for the Brown cup. "Well," said Harry, "if you like to come out on the field right now and play for the cup we will give you the chance to win." Notwithstanding their Sedan-like victory of a few minutes before, the Bramptons declined the offer. Harry has still faith in the boys.

A Cry for Light.

The opinion seems to be general among storekeepers and owners of property in the business party of the town that the electric lights, which are now turned off at midnight, should be left burning till daylight. It is argued, and with much show of reason, that to pay a night constable to guard property, and then handicap his vigilance by leaving him in Egyptian darkness at the very hour when thieves and miscreants would naturally be abroad, is to say the least rather questionable policy. To continue the light till daybreak would probably involve some extra outlay, but it should be borne in mind that it is too late to close the stable door when the horse has been stolen, and a small annual outlay in this direction might be the means of averting heavy loss of property. At all events the subject is one worthy of consideration by the municipal authorities.

Third Military District Camp.

Colonel Villiers, Brigade Major of the third military district, paid a visit to Peterborough yesterday afternoon, and accompanied by Col. Rogers and Capt. Stapleton made a minute inspection of the site on which, if satisfactory arrangements can be made, it is proposed to establish the military camp which will be assembled on September 15th, and remain unedr canvas for two weeks from that date. In conversation with a reporter of the EXAMINER, last evening, the Colonel expressed himself as being delighted with the location, which so far as natural advantages, such as water, etc., he declared to be superior to any that he had hitherto seen. The only disadvantageous point he said was the remoteness of Peterborough from some of the districts whence the battalions comprising the brigade would be drawn. But in spite of this, there is little doubt that if the citizens are really desirous of having the camp here, Peterborough will be chosen. There is every reason to believe that the town would reap considerable advantage from the presence of the camp in its vicinity. The provisions, forage, etc., which in themselves amount to a large sum of money, would have to be purchased here, while the volunteers would certainly spend, in the aggregate, a considerable amount. Then there would be the winding up review which would attract a large number of visitors to the town, and thus induce a further circulation of money. When the matter was broached by Captain Stapleton at the last meeting of the Council, there appeared to be some misunderstanding as to the reasons for the town making a grant towards the camp. The position is simply this. At Kingston a location can be had on which most of the needed accessories already exist, and the citizens there, knowing the value of the presence among them of a large military body, would willingly provide any that do not, and the same may be said of Deseronto and other places, all of which are doing their best to secure the encampment. All the authorities ask is that they should be put to no more expense that if Kingston were chosen as the location. The cost of erecting the requisite latrines, and sinking wells, etc., would not exceed $500. The merchants of town, many of whom have been canvassed, have promised to contribute towards this, and the Council might safely make an appropriation to the same object, as such action would be popular. By all means let Peterborough secure the camp.

EL PADRE" and "CABLE" CIGARS, for sale, at G. W. RUBIDGE'S. 27-3mos

A Double "Job" Perpetrated.

Two City Fathers Concerned in it—The Town Engineer also in the Secret —About $4,000 Involved.

It is natural for suspicious natures to infer when two of our municipal councillors get their heads together that a "job" is about to be perpetrated. And the fact of Mr. A. Rutherford, a representative of No. 3 ward, and Mr. R. H. Green, a councillor for No. 2 ward, having come to an "understanding," is no exception. We have come into possession of facts which will be news to many who have known both men and have had the utmost confidence in their uprightness and honesty. In spite of a natural desire to spare two men who have heretofore stood high with the people, it becomes the duty of the EXAMINER, in the interests of the public, to make a full revelation of the facts, which we have on the most reliable authority. There are others besides Mr. Rutherford and Mr. Green

CONCERNED IN THE LITTLE PLOT,

but we have not yet heard their names: these, however, and their connection with the matter are obtainable and may be made known before this paragraph meets the eyes of an astonished public. For the full understanding of the matter it will be necessary to state that Mr. Green is chairman of the Charity Committee of the Town Council, and Mr. Rutherford chairman of the Committee on Fire, Water and Light. It appears that Mr. Green is the first sinner in the matter, which is of such a peculiar character that he approached several men without success, till he tried Mr. Rutherford, and that gentleman's greed of gain was not proof against the

PROSPECTS OF PROFIT AND ADVANTAGE

Mr. Green held out. To do the latter justice, he did not propose to enjoy the whole of the spoil. He wheedled Mr. Rutherford into believing that the affair would be of mutual advantage. But there is many a slip between the cup and lip, and Mr. Rutherford may prove the truth of this saying. It appears that Mr. Green is the owner of a fine building lot on Reid street, next to Mr. John McClelland's. He has evidently been using some keen calculating to turn the possession of this to his own advantage. He has made a considerable display of depositing building material on the said lot, and evidently

WISHED TO DELUDE THE PUBLIC

into the belief that he was going to build a single dwelling thereon. But, still waters run deep. Mr. Green is quiet, but as the sequel will show, so deep. He knew a game with two of that. He entered into a collusion with the town engineer who is also in the plot, but has not committed himself so deeply as the principals, and induced the former to prepare plans for two fine dwellings to be erected on the above plot. It was not without a considerable bribe that Mr. Belcher consented to be a party to the scheme. The plans and specifications being duly completed, Mr. Green and Mr. Rutherford were ready to spring their little game. Mr. Rutherford signed the contract to erect a on Mr. Green's lot, the excavation has been nearly completed and the work will be pushed on with the despatch for which Mr. Rutherford as a contractor is noted. Each dwelling will consist of about ten rooms, and will be furnished with all modern improvements, and the cost will be about $4,000. Each house will have a front and a side entrance, and both will make desirable residences, the situation being delightfully pleasant; Mr. Green himself intends to occupy one. To show that the supply of houses in Peterborough does not exceed the demand, Mr. Green, so he informs us, has already received some half-dozen applications from proposing tenants, and the first sod was only turned a day or two ago. We are sure that Mr. Rutherford will make a first-class "job" of his little scheme, and hope that Mr. Green will long live to enjoy the handsome home he is erecting.

DOUBLE BRICK VILLA

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Fresh to strong winds, between west and north-west; cooler weather.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	64°	29.00°

3 o'clock	71°	29.04°

Syndicate Slaughter.

Three mild-eyed bovines that had strayed on the C.P.R. track this morning at Logan's crossing, three miles east of Norwood, between Belmont and Dummer, and were placidly engaged in chewing the cud and swishing off stray flies at brief intervals, were suddenly interrupted in their ruminations by the appearance of the local thundering down on them. A dash, a crash, a confused mingling of cow and cowcatcher, a scattering of fragments of bovine anatomics, and th train had passed on, leaving the cows wounded to death lying in the ditch. The shock had so little effect on the train that passengers on it were unaware of the accident.

The Building Boom.

It is probable that few perons realise the amount of building going on in Peterborough this year. Some conception can be gained by knowing that this year there are laid up in the walls of new buildings, over three millions and a half of bricks! The five brick yards in the vicinity of the town will make this year about three million eight hundred thousand bricks. Of these only about 300,000 will be used outside the town, while the immense remainder will be used in Peterborough. It is not probable that in Toronto, where so many plaster houses are erected, that this number will be greatly exceeded.

What We Would Like to See.

A lacrosse match every week.
And the Peterboroughs winning it.
Another week as lively as this has been.
Kruc's maternal grandparent.
A bountiful harvest.
And a roof taken in "John Smith's" breeches.
A match between the first and second twelves of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club.

What We may Expect.

The Hamilton Clippers.
More wind from the Lindsays.
The Town Council to make an appropriation for the camp.
Councillor McNaughton to kick against it.
Band concerts in Court House Park.
The lacrosse boys to get down to practice.
And redeem themselves by winning back the championship.
The monthly games of the Peterborough Athletic Association this evening.

What they are Saying.

Business is good.—Jim McIntyre.
You bet your life.—Daly Brothers.
Did you see my procession?—Bellaghem, the furniture man.
Peterborough is a live town.—Colonel Villiers.
Right you are, Colonel.—The visiting A. O. U. W.
We kalsomined the Peterboroughs.—The Excelsiors.
It takes the juniors to do the business.—The Peterborough second twelve.
I bet my money on the Excelsiors.—Ned Hugel.
Boys, you've got to win the championship back or quit.—Harry LeBrun.

Doris' Departure.

Doris with his acres of canvas, hundreds of horses, caravans of curiosities and army of attendant roughs and roust-abouts has come and gone. From the time that his caravans arrived at Riverside Park till the last lumbering wagon, creaking and groaning beneath the weight of its load, was laboriously hauled through the sticking mud at a late hour last night, the park has been a centre of attraction to a greater or less crowd of gaping spectators. The performances, both afternoon and evening were fairly well attended, and, though, like all shows of its kind merely a repetition with slight variations of what all have seen before, were fully up to the standard, and met with the appreciation of those who attended them. The scene on the grounds last evening as the crowds passed in to the entrance was an animated and not unpleasing one. The hundreds of eager spectators, their inquisitive faces illuminated by the fitful light of the flaming petroleum lights beneath which vendors of villianous lemonade plied their calling, the truculen looking toughs attached to the establishment lounging listlessly around, the hoarse shouting of the blatant agent of the side show and pedlars of toy baloons, all combined to present a study of human nature of greater interest, perhaps, to the contemplative mind that the lengthily advertised human and animal curiosities contained beneath the mamouth canopy. Everything passed of peacefully, the Ashburnham hotelmen reaped a harvest, and the town itself was doubtless benefitted by the influx of visitors. There are greater evils than the presence of a circus in town.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

ATHLETICS.

Racing on Rollers.

There was no race among the seniors at the Lansdowne rink last night, some dispute among the candidates for honors preventing them from entering, but two juniors rolled up to the starting point on the call of the bell, and waited for the word. They were J. Johnson and P. Coursey. They travelled in close company for a few laps, when Johnson came away from his rival, who gave up at the 7th lap and left him to finish alone. Johnson has won this race several times.

A Coming Pic-nic.

A meeting of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club was held at the Little Windsor hotel last evening, when it was decided to hold a pic-nic on the 25th. Mr. H. S. Calcutt, with his characteristic big-heartedness, has placed the steamer Golden-Eye at the disposal of the club for the occasion, and a trip will be made to Campbelltown. Committees were appointed to attend to the various details, and no effort will be spared to make the excursion one of the most enjoyable of the season. Full particulars will be announced later on. Mr. Harry Emerson, local editor of the EXAMINER, was elected an honorary member of the club.

P. A. A. Games.

The fortnightly games of the Peterborough Athletic Association were held last evening on the Association grounds at Ashburnham. The attendance was small and the entries for the various games not numerous. The 100 yard dash brought three competitors to the scratch, P. Cooper, G. F. Orde and A. W. Elliot. Orde and Elliott went off together, closely followed by Cooper. The latter, however, could not close up on them, and Orde won by a few inches in 11 3-5 seconds. For the one mile bicycle race two trundlers, A. E. Ames and J. MacNamara entered. MacNamara led for several laps, when Ames passed him and then again fell behind. He soon showed to the fore again, and getting down to business soon put a wide streak of twilight between himself and MacNamara which he increased to about a quarter of a lap, winning easily. The quarter mile race was between Orde and Clarke, the latter a Perth man who played with the lacrosse team on Thursday and won for himself the appellation of "the artful dodger." Orde led from the start and won in 1.04½. The same pair started for the mile race, but after a few turns Orde retired, leaving the artful dodger, who ran in good form, to trot alone. He completed the mile in 6 minutes, but would have made better time only for a refractory shoe which caused him to stop every once in a while and fasten it on afresh. Dr. G. Burnham and Mr. Rogers acted as judges, and Mr. Lawford, of the B. O. M. did the dispatching.

Italy's Cholera.

The Italian Government has just published an official report of the cholera epidemic of last year. Eight hundred and sixty-three communes, with a population of 5,771,000, or about one-fifth of the kingdom, were visited by the scourge; 25,587 cases were reported, 14,198 of which terminated fatally a mortality of about 60 per cent. In Naples, with a population of 945,000, there were 15,927 cases and 7,968 deaths.

Cost of War,

Last year the armies and navies of Europe cost $917,598,985, while the national debts absorbed the sum of $1,036,159,075 for interest alone, the aggregate national debts reaching $23,011,949,705. At the head of the list stands Russia whose army and navy estimates reached $230,512,500, and the interest on her national debt $168,656,895. France, England, and Germany come next in the order named.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Farewell Original.

By the time this reaches the eye of the numerous readers of the EXAMINER, the great and only original John Henry Charles Smith, with his baggy breeches and Brobdignagian boots will be whirling away on the G. T. R., bound for the illimitable plains of Western Wisconsin, the only state on this continent capable of affording standing room for this exaggerated specimen of humanity. John Henry Charles has, he says, been long uneasy in his mind, and now, goaded to desperation by the fun poked at him in the EXAMINER, and disgusted at a community unable to appreciate the dignity of having the "only original John Smith" as a citizen, has taken his departure for the free and open air of the Wisconsin prairies. John Henry Charles, arrayed in a suit of tweed, which must have taken more than the proverbial nine tailors who go to make a man to construct, and wearing the corporation boots and a cow-feeder of prodigious dimensions, called at the ticket office of Mr. T. Menzies to-day and purchased a through ticket on the Grand Trunk Railway entitling him to four seats on that road from Peterborough to Racine, Wisconsin. He left by the 5.30 train, bearing with him the baggy breeches and the good wishes of the EXAMINER, which hopes that in the free country for which he is bound he will find liberty to wear as baggy trousers and tremendous boots as he pleases. Shake! Smith, good-bye.

A Simple Steam Bath.

The following simple directions, by following which a bath may be obtained by those who are not possessed of those doubtful luxuries called "modern conveniencies," are extracted from an article by Dr. H. Engel in the Medical and Surgical Reporter. The treatment has especial reference to catarrhal jaundice:

"To assist nature still more I have the patient take a steam bath every night on going to bed. As one or the other of the young practitioners may not be familiar with the easiest and cheapest method of procuring such a bath I will explain my modus operandi. The room in which the patient is to take the bath is brought to a temperature of 74 deg., as determined by the thermometer—to prevent chilling; the patient, perfectly naked, sits on a high cane-seat chair, and is totally enveloped in a large blanket, pinned tightly round the neck, his feet resting on the blanket, and the latter covering him and the chair, and the little space within it air-tight. The blanket is so arranged that the open fold is at the back. Under the chair stands a bucket, or a small tub, half filled with cold water. Into this tub or pail gradually, one after another, three half pieces of "red-hot" brick are thrown, and the blanket is once again folded up. Certainly, as soon as the hot bricks come in contact with the water a sudden and rapid evolution of steam takes place, which being confined to the small space within the blanket, soon causes the patient to fall into a most thorough sweat. The first and second time the skin does not respond very actively, but every day the perspiration increases. If the patient feels uncomfortable—his hands, etc., all being confined within the blanket—the nurse will give him a mouthful or two of cold water to drink, and sponge off his forehead and face with a sponge dipped in cold water. These two procedures give a great relief.

When the patient is almost through with his forced perspiration, one of the attendants takes a hot iron and goes over the bed-sheets with it, so as to warm thoroughly the bed of the sick person. A hot iron wrapped in rags or a bottle filled with hot water may be put at the foot of the bed. Then the patient is released from the "sweat-box," and immediately a large bed-sheet, which has been during all this time hanging near the fire, is thrown over him and he is thoroughly dried. Dressing himself in his warmed night-garments, he retires to his warm bed, while the steam-bath apparatus is removed, and the blanket hung out to be aired and dried.

I have been so particular about these directions first for the reason given above, and then because I wish to impress the reader with the necessity of using the utmost caution that the patient during this procedure does not become chilled. While I have seen the greatest benefit arise from this steam bath, and improved with it cases that did not seem to yield to any other mode of treatment, I have observed irreparable injury being done for want of the caution alluded to. In one case I am positive that a patient had a relapse and died within twelve days, because, when coming out of the bath and feeling so well, as he had not for many a long day, he had run, "just for the fun of the thing," after a friend out into the cold entry."

Of the whole population of the globe it is estimated 90,000 persons die every day, or more than one each second.

Parting Lovers.

Winding upward rose a slender vine tree,
Winding upward round the fork of Enon.
Ah, no vine tree was it winding upward,
But a loving maiden round her lover!
Early had the twain begun their loving,
Loving ever since their days of childhood;
Now they had to say farewell forever.

To the maiden thus the stripling murmured:
"Three broad rivers, maiden, run before thee!
Nigh the third the garden green is growing;
In the garden blooms a tree of roses;
From that rose tree pluck a rose, O maiden,
Lay it near thy heart, within thy bosom;
Faster than the rose leaves fade within it,
Faster fades my heart for thee, beloved!"

To the stripling thus the maiden answered:
"Three high mountains, youth, arise before thee;
From the third there flows a quiet fountain;
Nigh the fountain lies a rock of marble;
On the marble stands a silver chalice;
In the silver chalice lies a snowflake.
Bear away the snowflake from the beaker;
Lay it near thy heart, upon thy bosom;
Faster than the flake of snow dissolveth,
Faster melts my heart for thee, beloved!"

The Little Brown Castle.

How sweet to the heart, as old age steals upon us,
To sit, idly musing, in some quiet spot;
To dream of our childhood—of happy companions,
And often to picture a well 'membered cot.
The soft, clinging tendrils that grow past the windows,
The long, waving grass and the murmuring rill,
Ah, bright is the vision we see after ages:
"The little brown castle" that stood on the hill.

It stood in the midst of a wide-spreading garden,
With now and again the cool shade of a tree,
That stretched forth its branches in dumb benediction,
And silently—mutely, was echoed by me.
How gentle the zephyrs, all laden with fragrance,
How tuneful the murmuring song of the rill!
Ah, tender the memory is after ages:
"The little brown castle" that stood on the hill.

A Congressional Scrimmage.

In the scrimmage in the house of representatives on Saturday morning, February 6, 1858, the prominent southerners engaged were Messrs. Barksdale, Lamar, and Reuben Davis of Mississippi, Burton Craige of North Carolina, and others. On the republican side were the three brothers Washburne, Kellogg, and Lovejoy of Illinois, and Potter of Wisconsin. This latter gentleman was a host in himself. He struck right and left with both arms, and left his mark wherever his blows fell. He had the reputation on that day of having "floored" no less than fifteen, most, if not all of whom, were the next day occupied in nursing black eyes.

It was the most surprising of all to see the venerable Richard Mott (the Quaker member from Ohio) in the thickest of the fight. Possibly he was there as a peacemaker, and I would not like to affirm that I saw him strike a blow. The most amusing sight was to witness the personal passage between Washburn of Maine and Craige of North Carolina. The former was a dapper little man of some five feet four or five inches, and the latter a tall, gaunt giant six feet and a half. While the first mentioned was just tall enough to plant his blows effectually in that region of his opponent's person where he was supposed to have carried his dinner, the last was compelled to stoop in order to reach his antagonist at all, and thus gave him an additional advantage. Barksdale of Mississippi lost his wig at the first attack, and, having recovered it, placed it on his head in a reversed position, much to the amusement of the spectators. Davis, of Mississippi, who made the rabid speech a few days previous, accounted for the sable setting around his eye by avowing that he accidentally stumbled over a chair, but Potter of Wisconsin thought he knew who had a hand in it."—Ben Perley Poore.

Ivy Against the Walls of Dwellings.

We have frequently heard it maintained that it is injurious and unwise to permit ivy to cover the walls of dwelling houses, as it must necessarily occasion an internal damp, prejudicial to human health and comfort, by arresting the rain and conducting it into the crevices of the walls, detaining it there until it oozes through and occasions such injurious dampness as it must be most desirable to prevent, even at the expense of sacrificing such an ornamental covering as a luxuriant and evergreen or variegated ivy. Now experience and reason testify to the very opposite of this, and they are found boldly asserting that no covering whatever is better calculated or more powerfully and uniformly tends to effect the desirable object of keeping the walls of a house dry, both internally and externally, than a general coat of ivy on the outside. Let any one examine any ivy-covered wall, and they will discover the leaves hang down, one over another, from the highest point to which the plant attains to the ground, forming an ornamental shield that casts off the rain and prevents its beating against the wall, conveying it from leaf to leaf downward, preventing its ever coming in contact with or moistening the walls; while the clinging nature of the plant, intended for the purpose of adhesion, thrusts its shoots into the crevices as roots and chapers, according as it ascends and acts as so many sucking engines, extracting and drawing away for the nourishment of its own luxuriance whatever moisture the walls may be supposed to attract, or imbibe from the atmosphere. No walls are dryer, or so dry, as those to which ivy forms a permanent external covering. Inside the shoots and next the wall will be found, in addition, a coating of dry dust and cobwebs, keeping the walls perfectly dry in the wettest of weather, and that, too, on aspects mostly exposed to the rain and least to the cheering smiles of the sun. Depend upon it, ivy clinging against a wall is a protector from damp, not a cause of it. Let our readers plant ivy against their dwellings without any fear of inconvenient results. It is a warmth-giving agent also, as many can testify. The old prejudice against the employment of ivy as an external covering to buildings is rapidly dying out, and will at no distant date cease to be put forward as worthy of attention.

The Daily Examiner.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1885.

AN APPRECIATED ENDORSEMENT.

"We clip the following from that ably edited and staunch liberal journal the Kingston Daily Whig.—"We observe that a disappointed office-seeker in the ranks of the Reform party in Peterborough has been striving to make trouble therein. The EXAMINER has found it necessary to devote some little attention to this gentleman and in so doing has decidedly handled him without gloves. He could have hardly expected other treatment. While not generally favoring the employment of personal criticism in journalism, there are times when its use seems warranted as the only means available to meet the circumstances of the case. Unfortunately there are to be found in the ranks of the Reform party here and there in a community, men who are a constant source of trouble, men whose self-seeking instincts and appetites for spoil take the place of principles as a motive to action. This class of men may for a time run well, and, by an appearance of zeal, convey the impression that they are useful workers, but sooner or later the cloven foot reveals itself. The real motive comes to the surface. Extravagant demands for recognition and reward are made and no end of trouble created. Men of this character are an injury to the Reform party, which feels less of loss than relief when they may decide to carry their greed of spoil and their office-seeking proclivities to the Conservative party. There such characteristics are sure to find congenial associations and there suitable work will be found and suitable rewards provided."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The public may rest assured that Riel will not be reprieved—that is, not till the Dominion elections, now pending, are decided.

Mr. Pearce, the Glasgow shipbuilder who was horsewhipped in London for scandalous treatment of a young school girl, who he induced to run away with him, is the Tory candidate for the representation in Parliament of one of the divisions of the former city.

The alleged anxiety of several Tory newspapers to hang Riel, may be explained by the fact that their party has no further use for him. There is no cabinet minister seeking a seat, and the rebel leader has no Provincial to resign in favour of some seatless Sir George Cartier.

Unless Hon. Thos. White, the new Minister of the Interior, makes the most radical reforms in the management of his department, there is a possibility of another election at some not distant future time. The Half-breeds have been disposed of, but Government agents, supply contractors and teamsters have made such enormous hauls out of the Government strong box, that it is to be assumed they will consult their interest by fomenting another rebellion.

The Hamilton Spectator seems bound to make payment in kind for the favor of illicit printing, and therefore indulges in illicit mendacity without stint. It asserts that Reformers are taking the part of Riel, and that the Quebec opposition to his sentence being carried out, comes solely from the Liberals of that Province. Both statements are absolutely false—as false as a subsidized journal of the Spectator's proficiency could make them. In its anxiety to distract attention from the guilt of the Government in provoking the rebellion, the Spectator is willing, nay eager, to utter falsehoods with the easy consciousness that it is doing the work which it has been paid to do.

Protection Doesn't Protect.

Notwithstanding the large customs duties imposed under the French tariff, the imports for the first half of the present year were valued at $438,000,000, and the exports at $313,000,000, being an excess of imports over exports in value $125,000,000. According to Sir. Leonard Tilley's school of economists, France has a very serious balance of trade against her, in spite of very liberal customs tariff.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-23w

Tabernacle Sermons.

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Three Groups.

"And they sat down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties."—MARK 6, 40.

The sun was far down in the west, night was coming on, and there were five thousand people tired, hungry, shelterless. You know how Washington felt at Valley Forge, when his army was starving and freezing. You may imagine how any great-hearted general would feel while his troops were suffering. Imagine, then, how Christ, with His great heart, must have felt as He saw these five thousand hunger-bitten people. Yes, I suppose there were ten thousand there, for the Bible says there were five thousand men, beside women and children. The case is put in that way, not because the women and the children were of less importance, but because they would eat less; and the whole force of the miracle turns on the amount of food required.

THE PROBLEM.

How shall this great multitude be supplied? I see a selfish man in that crowd pulling a luncheon out of his own pocket, and saying: "Let the people starve. They had no business to come out here in the desert without any provisions. They are improvident, and the improvident ought to suffer." There is another man not quite so heartless, who says: "Go up into the village and buy bread." What a foolish proposition! There is not enough food in all the village for this crowd; beside that, who has the money to pay for it? Xerxes' army, one million strong, was fed by a private individual of great wealth for only one day, but it broke him. Who, then, shall feed this multitude?

I see a man rising in that great crowd, and asking: "Is there any one here who has bread or meat?" A kind of moan goes through the whole throng. "No bread—no meat." But just at that time a lad steps up. You know when a great crowd goes off upon an excursion, there are always men and boys to go along for the purpose of merchandise and to strike a bargain; and so I suppose this boy had gone along for the purpose of merchandise; but he was nearly all sold out, having only five loaves and two fishes left. He is a generous boy and he turns them over to Christ.

JESUS TO THE RESCUE.

But these loaves would not feed twenty people, how much less ten thousand! Though the action was so generous on the part of the boy, so far as satisfying the multitude was concerned, it was a dead failure. Then Jesus comes to the rescue. He is apt to come when there is a dead lift. He commands the people that they sit down "in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties," as much as to say, "Order! order! so that none be missed." It was fortunate that that arrangement was made; otherwise, at the very first appearance of bread, the strong ones would have clutched it, while the feeble and the modest would have gone unsupplied.

I suppose it was no easy work to get that crowd seated, for they all wanted to be in the front row, lest the bread give out before their turn came. No sooner are they seated than there comes a great hush over all the people. Jesus stands there, His light complexion and auburn locks illumined by the setting sun. Every eye is on Him. They wonder what He will do next. He takes one of the loaves that the boy furnished, and breaks off it a piece which immediately grows to as large a size as the original loaf, the original loaf staying as large as it was before the piece was broken off. And they leaned forward with intense scrutiny, saying, "Look! look!" When some one, anxious to see more minutely what is going on, rises in front, they cry, "Sit down in front! Let us look for ourselves."

And then, when the bread is passed around, they taste of it sceptically and inquiringly, as much as to say: "Is it bread? Really, is it bread?" Yes, the best bread that was ever made, for Christ made it. Bread for the first fifty and second fifty. Bread for the first hundred and second hundred. Bread for the first thousand and second thousand. Pass it all around the circle; there, where that aged man sits leaning on his staff, and where that woman sits with the child in her arms. Pass it all around. Are you all fed? "Aye! aye!" respond the ten thousand voices, "all fed." One basket would have held the loaves before the miracle. It takes twelve baskets now. Sound it through all the ages of earth and heaven, that Christ the Lord comes to our suffering race with the bread of this life in one hand and the bread of eternal life in the other hand.

THE ANALOGY.

You have all immediately run out the analogy between that scene and this. There were thousands there; there are thousands here. They were in the desert; many of you are in the desert of trouble and sin. No human power could feed them; no human power can feed you. Christ appeared to them; Christ appears to you. Bread enough for all in the desert; bread enough for all who are here. And, as on that occasion, so in this; we have the people "sit down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties," for the fact that many of you stand in no fault of ours, for we have tried to give you seats. As Christ divided that company into groups, so I divide this audience into three groups: the pardoned, the seeking, and the careless.

1. And, first, I speak to ...

THE PARDONED.

It is with some of you half-past five in the morning and some faint streaks of light. With others, it is seven o'clock, and thus full dawn. With others, it is twelve o'clock at noon, and you sit in full blaze of Gospel pardon. I bring you congratulation. Joseph delivered from Potiphar's dungeon, Daniel lifted from the lion's den, Saul arrested and unhorsed on the road to Damascus. Oh, you delivered captives, how your eyes should gleam, and your souls should bound, and your lips should sing in this pardon! From what land did you come? A land of darkness. What is to be your destiny? A land of light. Who got you out? Christ, the Lord. Can you sit so placidly and unmoved while all heaven comes to your soul with congratulation, and harps are strung, and crowns are lifted, and a great joy swings round the heavens at the news of your disenthralment? If you could realize out of what a pit you have been dug, to what height you are to be raised, and to what glory you are destined, you would spring to you feet with "Hosanna."

AN IMPERIAL ARRIVAL.

In 1808 there was a meeting of the emperors of France and Russia at Erfurt. There were distinguished men there also from other lands. It was so arranged that when any of the emperors arrived at the door of the reception-room, the drum should beat three times; but when a lesser dignitary should come, then the drum would sound but twice. After a while the people in the audience-chamber heard two taps of the drum. They said: "A prince is coming." But after a while there were three taps, and they cried, "The emperor!" Oh, there is a more glorious arrival at your soul to-night! The drum beats twice at the coming of the lesser joys and congratulations of your soul; but it beats once, twice, thrice at the coming is of a glorious King—Jesus the Saviour, Jesus the God. I congratulate you. All are yours—things present and things to come.

II. I come now to speak of the second division—those who are seeking. Some of you with more earnestness, some of you with less earnestness; but I believe that, to-night, if I should ask all those who wish to find the way to heaven to rise, and the world did not scoff at you, and your own proud heart did not keep you down, there would be a thousand souls who would cry out as they rose up: "Show me the way to heaven." That young man who smiled to the one next to him, as though he cared for none of these things, would be on his knees crying for mercy. Why this anxious look? Why, at the beginning of this service, did you do what you have not done for years—bow your head in prayer? You are seeking.

MERCY FOR ALL.

"I am a gambler," says one man. There is mercy for you. "I am a libertine," says another. There is mercy for you. "I have plunged into every abomination." Mercy for you. The door of grace does not stand ajar to-night, nor half swung around on the hinges. It is wide, wide open; and there is nothing in the Bible, or in Christ, or God, or earth, or heaven, or hell, to keep you out of the door of safety, if you want to go in. Christ has borne your burdens, fought your battles, suffered for your sins. The debt is paid, and the receipt is handed to you, written in the blood of the Son of God—will you have it? Oh, decide the matter now! Decide it here! Fling your exhausted soul down at the feet of an all-compassionate, all-sympathising, all-pitying, all-pardoning Jesus. The laceration on His brow, the gash in His side, the torn muscles and nerves of His feet beg you to come.

But, I remember that one inch outside the door of pardon, and you are in as much peril as though you were a thousand miles away. Many a shipwrecked sailor has got almost to the beach, but did not get on it. There are thousands in the world of the lost who came very near being saved—perhaps as near as you are to-night—but were not saved.

A WRECK.

On the eastern coast of England a few weeks ago, in a fishing village, there was a good deal of excitement. While people were in church, the sailors and fishermen hearing the Gospel on the Sabbath, there was a cry: "To the beach!" and the minister closed the Bible, and with his congregation went out to help, and the saw in the offing a ship in trouble, but there was some disorder amid the fishing-smacks, and amid all the boats, and it was almost impossible to get anything launched. But after a while they did, and they pulled away for the wreck, and came almost up, when suddenly the distressed bark in the offing capsized and they all went down. Oh, if the life-boats had only been ten minutes quicker! And how many a life-boat has been launched from the Gospel shore. It has come almost up to the drowning, and yet, after all, they were not rescued. Somehow they did not get into it!

I suppose there are people who asked for our prayers, and I suppose there were some in the side room, last Sabbath night, talking about their souls, who will miss heaven. They do not take the last step, and all the other steps go for nothing until you have taken the last step, for I have here, in the presence of God and this people, to announce the solemn truth, that to be almost saved is to be lost forever. That is all I have to say to the second division.

THE CARELESS.

III. I come now to speak to the careless. You look indifferent. You say, "I came in here because a friend invited me to see what is going on, but with no serious intentions about my soul. I have so much work and so much pleasure on hand, don't bother me about religion." And yet you are gentlemanly, and you are ladylike, in your behavior, and, therefore, I know that you will listen respectfully if I talk courteously. Christian people are sometimes afraid to talk to men and women of the world lest they be insulted. If they talk courteously to people of the world, they will listen courteously. So now I try to come in that way, and in that spirit, and talk to those of you who tell me that you are careless about your soul.

Then you have a soul, have you? Yes, precious, with infinite capacity for joy or suffering, winged for flight somewhere. Beckoned upward, beckoned downwards. Fought after by angels and by fiends. Immortal!

"The sun is but a spark of fire.
A transient meteor in the sky:
The soul, immortal, as its sire,
Can never die.

Your body will soon be taken down, the castle will be destroyed, the tower will be in the dust, the windows will be broken out, and the place where your body sleeps will be forgotten; but your soul, after that, will be living acting, feeling, thinking—where? where? Oh, there must be something of incomputable worth in that for which heaven gave up its best inhabitant, and Christ went into martyrdom, and at the coming of which angels chant an eternal litany and devils rush to the gate. When everything above you, and beneath you, and around you, is intent upon that soul, you cannot afford to be careless, especially when I think, this moment, while I speak, there are thousands of souls in heaven rejoicing that they attended to this matter in time, while at this very instant there are souls in the lost world mourning that they did not attend to it in time. Hark to

THE HOWLING OF THE DAMNED!

Oh, if this room could be vacated of this audience, and you were all gone, and the wan spirits of the lost could come up and occupy this place, and I could stand before them with offers of pardon through Jesus Christ, and then ask them if they would accept it, there would come up an instantaneous, multitudinous, overwhelming cry: "Yes! yes! yes! yes!" No such fortune for them. They had their day of grace, and sacrificed it. You have yours; will you sacrifice it? I wish that I could have you see these things as you will one day see them!

Suppose, on your way home, a runaway horse should dash across the street, or between the dock and the boat you should accidentally slip, where would you be at twelve o'clock to-night or seven o'clock to-morrow morning? Or for all eternity where would you be? I do not answer the question. I just leave it to you to answer.

YOUR LAST HOUR.

But suppose you escape fatal accident. Suppose you go out by the ordinary process of sickness. I will just suppose now that your last hour has come. The doctor says, as he goes out of the room, "Can't get well." There is something in the faces of those who stand around you that prophesies that you cannot get well. You say within yourself: "I can't get well." Where are your comrades now? Oh, they are off to the gay party that very night! They dance as well as they ever did. They drink as much wine. They laugh as loud as though you were not dying. They destroyed your soul, but they do not come to help you die.

Tabernacle Sermons.

Well, there is father and mother in the room. They are very quiet, but occasionally they go out into the next room and weep bitterly. The bed is very much dishevelled. They have not been able to make it up for two or three days. There are four or five pillows lying around, because they have been trying to make you as easy as they could. On the one side of your bed are all the past years of your life—the Bibles, the sermons, the communion tables, the offers of mercy. You say: "Take them away." Your mother thinks you are delirious. She says: "There is nothing there, my dear, nothing there." There is something there. It is your wasted opportunities. It is your procrastinations. It is those years you gave to the world that you ought to have given to Christ. They are there, and some of them put their fingers on your aching temples, and some of them feel for the strings of your heart, and some put more thorns in your tumbled pillow, and you say: "Turn me over;" and they turn you over, but alas! there is a more appalling vision. You say: "Take that away!" They say: "There is nothing there—nothing there." There is—an open grave there; the judgment is there; a lost eternity is there. Take it away! They cannot take it away.

"You say: "How dark it is getting in the room!" Why, the burners are all lighted. Your family come up one by one, and tenderly kiss you good-by. Your feet are cold, and the hands are cold, and the lips are cold, and they take a small mirror and they put it over your mouth to see if there is any breathing, and that mirror is taken away without a single blur upon it; and they whisper through the room: "She is gone." And then the door of the body opens and the soul flashes out. Make room for the destroyed spirit.

DOWN! DOWN! DOWN!

Push back that door! Let it come into its eternal residence. Woe! woe! No cup of merriment now, but cup of the wrath of Almighty God. The last chance for heaven gone. The door of mercy shut. The doom sealed. The blackness of darkness forever!

Voltaire is there. Herod is there. Robespierre is there. The debauchees are there. The murderers are there. All the rejectors of Jesus Christ are there. And you will be there unless you repent. You cannot say, my dear brother, that you were not warned This sermon would be a witness against you. You cannot say that God's Holy Spirit never strove with your heart. He is striving now. You cannot say that you had no chance for heaven, for the Omnipotent Son of God offered you His rescue. You cannot say: "I had no warning about that world; I did not know there was any such place," for the Bible distinctly rings in your ears to-day, saying: "At the end of the world the angels shall separate the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire." And again that book says: "The wicked shall be turned into hell and all the nations that forget God." And again it says: "The smoke of their torment ascendeth forever and ever."

You cannot say that you did not hear about heaven,

THE OTHER ALTERNATIVE,

for you hear of it now: "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. No sorrow; no suffering; no death. Oh, will you be careless any longer, when I tell you that Christ, the Conqueror of earth and hell, offers you now escape from all peril, and offers to introduce you this very hour into the peace and pardon of the Gospel, preparing you for that good land? The sides of Calvary run blood for you. Jesus, who had not where to lay His head, offers you His heart as a pillow of rest. Christ offers with his own body to bridge over the chasm of death, saying, "Walk over me; I am the way."

O suffering Jesus! the thief scoffed at Thee, and the malefactor spit on Thee, and the soldiers stabbed Thee, but these who sit before Thee to-day have no heart to do that. O Jesus! tell them of Thy love, tell them of Thy sympathy, tell them of the rewards Thou wilt give them in the better land. Groan again, O blessed Jesus! groan again, and perhaps when the rocks fall, their hard hearts may break.

"Nothing brought Him from above,
Nothing but redeeming love."

The promise is all free, the path all clear. Come, Mary, and sit to-night at the feet of Jesus. Come, Bartimeus, and have your eyes opened. Come, O prodigal! and sit at thy father's table. Come, O you suffering, sinning, dying soul, and find rest on the heart of Jesus. The Spirit and the Bride say "Come," and churches militant and triumphant say "Come," and all the voices of the past, mingling with all the voices of the future, in one great thunder of emphasis, bid you "Come now!" Are not those of you who are in the third class ready to pass over into the second division, and become seekers after Christ? Aye, are you not ready to pass over into the first division, and become the pardoned sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty? I can do no more than offer you, through Jesus Christ, peace on earth and everlasting residence in His presence.

"When God makes up his last account
Of natives in His holy mount,
'Twill be an honor to appear
As one new-born and nourished there."

Good-night! The Lord bless you! Go to your homes seeking after Christ. Sleep not until you have made your peace with God. Good-night—a deep, hearty, loving, Christian Good-night!

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

CHAPTER VIII.
CALLED BACK.

I write this chapter with great reluctance. If I could make my tale connected and complete without it, I should prefer to say nothing about the events it records. If some of my experiences have been strange one's all save these can be explained; but these never will, never can be explained to my satisfaction.

Pauline awoke, and as I saw her eyes, I shuddered as if a freezing wind had passed over me. It was not madness I saw in them, neither was it sense. They were dilated to the utmost extent; they were fixed and immovable, yet I knew they saw absolutely nothing; that their nerves conveyed no impression to the brain. All my wild hopes that reason would return at the expiration of her fainting fit, were at an end. It was clear that she had passed into a state far more pitiable than her former one.

I spoke to her; called her by name; but she took no notice of my words. She seemed to be unaware of my presence. She looked ever, with strange fixed eyes, in one direction.

Suddenly she rose, and, before I could interpose to prevent her, passed out of the room. I followed her. She went swiftly down the stairs, and I saw she was making for the front door. Her hand was on the latch when I came up to her and again called her by name; entreating, even commanding her to return. No sound of my voice seemed to reach her ears. In her critical state, for so I felt it to be, I shrank from restraining her by force, thinking it would be better to leave her free to go as she listed; of course accompanying her to guard her against evil.

I caught up my hat and a large cloak, both of which were hanging in the hall; the latter I wrapped around her as she walked, and managed to draw the hood over her head. She made no resistance to this, but she let me do it without a word to show that she noticed the action. Then, with me at her side, she walked straight on.

She went at a swift but uniform pace, as one who had a certain destination in view. She turned her eyes neither to the left nor to the right—neither up nor down. Not once during that walk did I see them move, not once did I see an eyelid quiver. Although my sleeve was touching hers, I am certain she had no thought or knowledge of my presence.

I made no further attempt to check her progress. She was not wandering about in an aimless manner. Something, I knew not what, was guiding or impelling her steps to some set purpose. Something in her disordered brain was urging her to reach some spot as quickly as possible. I dreaded the consequences of restraining her from so doing. Even if it was but an exaggerated case of sleep-walking it would be unwise to wake her. Far better to follow her until the fit ended.

She passed out of Walpole street, and, without a moment's hesitation, turned at right angles and went along the straight broad road. Along this road for more than half a mile she led me, then, turning sharply round, walked half way through another street; then she stopped before a house.

An ordinary three-story house of the usual London type. A house differing very little from my own and thousands of others, except that, by the light of the street lamp, I could see it looked ill cared for and neglected. The window-panes were dusty, and in one of them was a bill stating that this desirable residence was to let, furnished.

I marveled as to what strange freak of mind could have led Pauline to this untenanted house. Had any one she had known in former days lived here? If so, it was, perhaps, a hopeful sign that some awakened memory had induced her to direct her unwitting steps to a place associated with her earlier days. Very anxious, and even much excited, I waited to see what course she would now take.

She went straight up to the door and laid her hand upon it, as though she expected it would yield to her touch. Then, for the first time, she seemed to hesitate and grow troubled.

"Pauline, dearest," I said, "let us go back now. It is dark, and too late to go in there to-night. To-morrow, if you like, we will come again."

She answered not. She stood before that door with her hand pressing against it. I took her arm, and tried gently to lead her away. She resisted with a passive strength I should not have believed she possessed. Whatever was the dimly conceived object in my poor wife's brain, it was plain to me it could only be attained by passing through that door.

I was quite willing to humor her. Having come so far, I feared to retreat. To cross her wishes in the present state of things I felt might be fatal. But how could we gain entrance?

There was no gleam of light up-stairs. As you looked at the house you knew intuitively it was uninhabited. The agent whose name appeared on the bill carried on business a mile away, and, even if I had ventured to leave Pauline and go in search of him, at this time of night my expedition would be fruitless.

As I cast round, wondering what was the best thing to do—whether to fetch a cab and carry my poor girl into it, or whether to let her wait here until she recognized the impossibility of entering the house, and, at last growing weary, choose to return home of her own accord—as I debated these alternatives a sudden thought struck me. Once before my latchkey had opened a strange door, it was within the bounds of possibility it might do so again. I knew that uninhabited houses are often from carelessness or convenience left with doors only latched. It was an absurd idea, but, after all, there was no harm in trying. I drew out my key, a duplicate of that used on another occasion. I placed it in the keyhole without a hope of success, and, as I felt the lock turn and saw the door yield, a thrill of something like horror ran through me, for now that it had come to pass I knew this thing could be no mere coincidence.

AND HAVE THEM SUBSTANTIALLY BOUND.

—READ WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:—

COBOURG WORLD.—"We have seldom seen better binding."

PORT HOPE TIMES.—"We are surprised at the excellent workmanship, which could not be surpassed by any establishment in the Dominion."

LINDSAY POST.—"The binding was examined by a large number, and all were much pleased with the appearance and thoroughness with which the work had been executed.

WEST DURHAM NEWS.—"We had our books very neatly bound at the Examiner Bindery, and they are, in every particular, a credit to the establishment."

OMEMEE HERALD.—"We have received from the Peterborough Examiner Bookbindery our volumes of Picturesque Canada, bound in a most beautiful and lasting style. Persons who have examined the binding and general finish of the work, pronounce it equal, if not superior, to any work of the kind turned out of city binderies."

BOBCAYGEON INDEPENDENT.—"The workmanship is in every respect first-class, and of a lasting and wearing character, and handsome design."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Light to moderate weather; fine cool winds.

Not Worth Marrying.

A Cobourg young man, so the Sentinel-Star says, is hesitating whether to marry a Canadian or a Yankee girl. A Yankee girl by all means, young man. Any "duffer" who can remain for one moment undecided on the subject is not worthy of a Canadian wife.

Partners Parted.

Messrs. Masson and Hamaker, of the Blythe woollen mills, have dissolved partnership, Mr. Masson continuing the business alone, and Mr. Hamaker going to take charge of the carding department of the Campbellford woollen mills.

Generosity Acknowledged.

Rev. Edward Duff, Superintendent of the Peterborough branch of the Barnardo Home for boys, desires to acknowledge his appreciation of the generosity of T. G. Hazlitt, Esq., manager of the Dickson estate, in receipting an account of $18 for material, due to him by the institution, waiving the formality of cash payment.

A Pretty Picture.

There is now on exhibition in the window of Mr. H. Le Brun the photograph of the Ontario and Shamrock lacrosse teams, taken during the game on Monday. The group is a capital one. The portraits are all good and clear, those of Dan Rose and M. J. Polan being particularly so. On the left of the group our own Harry looms up with a lurking smile on his good natured face, while the fair demoiselles of Peterborough seated on the grand stand, and backed up by the foliage of the trees in the middle distance, complete a picture of much interest. Mr. G. B Sproule was the artist.

A Fine Building.

The three fine stores on Hunter street being erected by the enterprising Mr. John Lynch are rapidly nearing completion. Workmen were this morning engaged in putting the plate glass in the windows. The lights are among the largest in town, being 7x10 feet, and very fine in quality. They were imported by Kingan Bros. at the same time that the plates for their own windows were brought from Montreal. Mr. J. Griffin, boot and shoe maker, will occupy one of the stores, another will be taken by a druggist, who is coming from Lindsay, while a brisk contest for the tenancy of the third is going on among several parties. The second floor will be rented for offices, and on the third will be a fine hall for society purposes.

A Lion Rampant.

John Lyon is a circus 'cuss,' who, tiring of the varied vicissitudes of travelling with the J. B. Doris aggregation, and enamoured of Peterborough's picturesqueness, decided to settle down here. His restless spirit, however, wouldn't settle worth a cent, and he last night sallied forth to get acquainted, confining his attention exclusively to saloonists. Unfortunately he became too intimately acquainted with the piquancy of Peterborough whisky, which led to the formation of two other acquaintances, which he would probably have rather avoided. The first was P. C. McGinty, who considerately conducted him to the town coop, where he spent the night, and the second was Mr. James Stevenson, the acting magistrate, to whom he was formally introduced by Mr. McGinty this morning. The latter gentleman, after delivering our lecsine friend a homily on the horrors of whisky, discharged him from custody, and Mr. Lyon will probably rejoin the other animals of his species with the Doris menagerie in some other town.

Sunday Supper.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one [illegible] box. [illegible] pounds in the b[illegible] Sheen.

Bo for Stoney Lake.

Remember the True Blue's excursion to Stony Lake on Wednesday next, 19th of August. See posters for particulars.

Sanitary Precautions.

A case of typhoid fever, in the west end of the town, has been reported to the medical health officer, and the necessary sanitary precautions suggested by the circumstances have been taken.

$10.00 Reward.

Will be paid for the conviction of the person or persons who have torn and mutilated the posters of the True Blue's excursion and picnic on Wednesday next, 19th August, to Stony Lake. Fred W. Wier, chairman of Committee.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer :—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	69°	29.25°
1 o'clock	75°	29.25°
3 o'clock	73°	29.25°

They Will Be Welcomed.

The Post thus delivers :—"With the fine public spirit now worked up at Peterborough in connection with the grand central exhibition and the new and spacious grounds there is every prospect that the fair will be a successful one and we hope to see Lindsay men and county of Victoria breeders largely represented in many important classes."

A Greater Than Doris is Here.

Many persons will be surprised to learn that Mr. Barnum is in our midst. No! not the great Phineas T., but a gentleman almost as famous, though far more modest, in his own line. Our Mr. Barnum has recently taken up his abode among us and will contribute new excellencies to the already excellent manufactures of Porter Brothers, carriage builders, by putting into their carriage tops the excellent workmanship that has made him famous among the craft.

Murray's Illustrated Lectures.

All patriotic Canadians—and all Canadians are patriotic—in Peterborough will be pleased to know that they will, the coming season, have an opportunity of listening to "Murray's Illustrated Canadian Lectures." The lecturer's reputation as a litterateur and orator are so widely known that no expression of ours is needed to emphasize them. The style in which he will present the history, scenery resources and future prospects of Canada are certain to be done both verbally and pictorially, in a manner to secure the applause and quicken with patriotic pride the hearts of all true Canadians.

An Alarm in Ashburnham.

A number of good people in peaceful Ashburnham were on Thursday night thrown into a state of consternation by the proceedings of a pair of nocturnal prowlers, who made no less than three attempts to enter houses there, it is supposed with burglarious intent. The houses were those of Mr. John Wood, the village clerk, Mr. H. Calcutt's and Mr. J. C. Sullivan's. In the first two cases the intruders were driven away before gaining an entrance, but at Mr. Sullivan's a man had actually got into the house, but on an outcry being raised jumped out of a window and decamped. Ashburnhamites now doubly bar their doors and windows, and spend a considerable time every night in exploring the underside of beds before retiring to rest.

Complimentary.

The Lindsay Post thus refers to the party composing the Sons of England excursion to Sturgeon Point on civic holiday, which is duly acknowledged :—"The party numbered about three hundred, Sons of England lodge of Peterborough. If the throng had been carefully selected to pick out the stoutest and sturdiest men and the handsomest girls to be found in that town and ship them along the line as a sample of the community in general then the inspectors did their work well. If the party selected themselves then there must have been a fine lot to select from. The excursionists spent the day at the Point and returned about 6 o'clock to Lindsay, well satisfied indeed with the day's amusement. A number took advantage of the train being held for an hour to view the town. The train reached Peterborough at 9 o'clock.

Personal.

Mr. Donald Edwards, of Montreal, is in town.

His Lordship Bishop Jamot is going on a visit to Rochester Monday morning.

Mr. Arthur Stevenson and Mr. C. Clementi have returned from New York, where they have been visiting.

Mayor Cox and Messrs. A. L. Davis and W. A. Merrow, who have been camping in Muskoka, returned to the city last night.

Mr. C. W. Sawers and Mr. C. Dunlop left this morning for Duluth, where they intend putting in their holiday season.

Mr. James Dolan will take charge of the Oriental Hotel during the absence of Mr. J E. McIntyre, who left for Nebraska at an early hour this morning.

Father O'Connel of Douro, and Father Conway, P. P., of Peterborough, arrived in town last evening, having returned from Portland, Maine, where they have been holiday-making.

Mr. W. G. Stethem, representing the Sun, St. John, N.B., and formerly one of the proprietors of the now Dominion Type Foundry Company, Montreal, is in town visiting with his brother, Mr. Geo. Stethem, hardware merchant.

More Attractions at the Golden Lion.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. are daily opening new fall goods. Their grand exhibit this season is well worth your inspection, as they will surpass their former efforts for quantity, variety, quality and cheapness. See their new Cretonnes with Fringes to match, Lace Curtains, Ederdine and Embroidered Serim Cloths, Boating Wraps, Fancy Dark English Prints, etc.

What they are Saying.

Everybody is going to our excursion.—The True Blues'.

Our friends at Peterborough are going in with energy to build up a successful fair.—The Lindsay Post.

No place like home.—Mayor Cox.

Commodore Calcutt is a brick.—The lacrosse boys.

I'm the tuuld McIntyre.—Tom Dolan.

I did him up on the mile.—The artful dodger.

But I won the quarter.—G. Orde.

We'll take in the lacrosse pic-nic.—Everybody.

What We may Expect.

Ashburnhamites to load up their shot-guns.

The lacrosse pic-nic to be a grand success.

The legal base ballers to down the mercantile men.

A good time and lots of fun at the True Blues' excursion to Stony Lake on Wednesday.

And both sides to run up big scores.

A cheap excursion to Montreal over the C. P. R.

The speedy completion of St. Peter's Cathedral.

The town council to charge Bellaghem $100 for having a street parade.

Exultant reports of the Excelsiors' victory in the Brampton papers.

Riel to get a rest until after the elections.

What We Would Like to See.

Block paved crossings on George street.

The ladies turn out to see the games of the Peterborough Athletic Association.

A fine day to-morrow.

The Toronto lacrosse club paying us a visit.

The tramps who caused the scare in Ashburnham on Thursday nights.

The man who made John Smith's trousers.

A $1 excursion to Toronto and return.

New life infused into the Peterborough boating club.

And a four-oared crew afloat.

Market Memoranda.

There was a fair market this morning. A delightful variety reigned in the prices of provisions, eggs being quoted at from 11 to 12½ cts., berries at $1 per pail, potatoes 15 cts. per peck, and butter from 20 to 22 cts. a pound.

A Family Quarrel.

There is a row in the Cobourg Tory camp regarding the Postmastership at that place. Lieut. Col. Rogers, President of the Conservative Association, has been hawking around a petition for signature by the party, praying that he be appointed Postmaster; but he is not the only claimant of the office. It appears that Mr. Thomas Heenan, of Grafton, was also promised the job. On the "eve of the general election," according to the testimony of a Tory organ which favors Mr. Heenan's appointment, Messrs. Guillet and Mulholland went to that gentleman and promised him the office. Doubtless the office was bartered for a "consideration." Will Mr. Heenan continue the revelations of the happy family's private history, and tell an amused, if not edified, public just what he gave in return for the transfer of the Postmastership on the eventful election eve? The funniest part of the whole thing is that the present incumbent of the office is alive and well and competent to perform his duties. But the office-seekers must be provided for, and that before another general election, or woe betide the men who have taken to peddling the Government positions in return for political support!—Hamilton Times.

Smokers!

Beware of cigars artificially flavored for the purpose of hiding the poor quality of tobacco used in flavored cigars. Insist upon having the old reliable brands—"CABLE" and "EL PADRE." 13d-25w-1y

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

On hearing that the body of Kenneth Urquhart, Esq., of Lakefield, was found in a canal basin, near Niagara.

(Published by Special Request.)

From Lakefield we have found to-day
News that my heart doth pain,
That an old friend of mine is gone.
I'll never see again:

Who little thought when he and I
A pleasure sail did have,
That he'd be in so short a time
Found in a watery grave.

Nor when he left his Highland home,
Came here his days to spend,
After he'd cross'd the mighty deep,
He'd come to such an end.

What dangers seen and unseen we Live, amidst here on earth,
In health to-day, but know not what
To-morrow shall bring forth.

He's gone and left behind a name
T'will long remembered be;
Without a foe he was beloved
By the community.

A loving neighbor, faithful friend;
In all his actions true;
His principle the golden rule.
Do as you'd be done to.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

SHOOTING WITH INTENT.

Deliberate Attempt to Kill by a Faucher's Point Fisherman,

Who Promises to Aim Better Next Time.

About a month ago a fisherman named Odette, who lives near the C. P. R. station, while trowling in the Otonabee, near Faucher's Point, caught his hook in a net belonging to another fisherman named Wedlock, which the latter had set across the river there. He disentangled the hook and said nothing about the matter, but it seems that Wedlock got it into his head, that, it being illegal to use a net in this way, Odette would lay an information against him, and on several occasions approached the latter with a view to keeping him quiet. Nothing further, however, transpired until last Friday evening, when Odette, while going down the river, saw on shore what he imagined to be some camper's blanket, but which, on a closer inspection, proved to be a net. From what has since taken place it is believed that Wedlock, to whom the net belonged, must have seen Odette examining it, and, making up his mind that he was going to give him away, determined on revenge. At any rate, on Saturday morning, about half past six o'clock, while Odette was sitting smoking beside the river between another fisherman named Gosling and Mr. Hill, a Port Hope merchant, Wedlock came along in a canoe, and pausing as he came opposite the party, took up a gun and with deliberate aim fired at Odette. The shot took effect principally in the latter's hand, which at the time the shot was fired was raised to his pipe, though two or three shots also lodged in his face, and his hat was well peppered. The act was so sudden that the whole party were dumbfounded, and before they recovered themselves Wedlock had retired, with a parting remark to the effect that he would take better aim next time. Odette, whose injuries were not serious, returned to town yesterday, and is this morning hunting a J. P., to swear out an information against Wedlock. Mr. Hill and Gosling had both a narrow escape, the shot scattering all around them, and it is said that the former intends to assist in bringing Wedlock to justice. Odette states that he has been approached by friends of Wedlock, with offers of money if he would say nothing of the matter.

Can Cholera be Coming?

The Disease Directing its Course Northward.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—Advices from the afflicted sections of Spain to commercial houses in London describe an utter paralysis of business everywhere throughout the country. The stories which come from the infected districts recall the worst of the scenes which are associated with famine and war. For example, in the town of Erla, in the province of Saragossa, there is no longer a mayor or a municipal government. The mayor and all the city officials are dead, stricken down with the plague, and all the doctors and chemists of the place have fallen victims to the pestilence. The shops are closed and the town is deserted by the inhabitants. The people are in a destitute condition, and the mayor of the neighbouring town of Egea, which is the only place from which the fugitives could expect aid, has forbidden the citizens to render them any assistance. He has declared an absolute blockade, and no person is allowed to enter Egea on any pretext whatever. This is an instance of what is commonly going on throughout Spain, the provincial towns shutting their gates to all intruders. Physicians and government officers as well as people are fleeing from the disease. The survivors of Erla are consequently camping out on the hillsides, without houses and with but scanty means of subsistence. According to the latest news some of them had set fire to the town, hoping by that means to burn out the plague.

The fear of the importation of cholera has taken practical shape along the Mediterranean coast and the most rigorous quarantine precautions have been established at Gibraltar, on the island of Malta and at the ports of Egypt against all French and Spanish vessels. Marseilles steamers are not allowed to call at Malta, Suez or Port Said, and the most urgent measures are being everywhere taken at other places to ward off the threatening pestilence.

Stringent measures are being taken to keep the cholera away from Paris. Travelers from the south are quarantined. The streets are cleansed every night.

The Paris National, the first journal to announce the appearance of cholera at Marseilles, insists that the number of deaths that have occurred there from the disease is still much underrated.

1,840 deaths from the disease reported Friday throughout Spain.

The existence of the cholera within the Spanish lines has been officially declared and the disease is spreading. There were four deaths at Gibraltar to-day from cholera, traced to infection contracted on Spanish soil. A deputation waited on the Governor and requested him to shut off communication with Spain. This he refused to do. The panic increases hourly, and the exodus grows correspondingly. The populace are greatly discontented over the conduct of the military authorities in refusing to adopt the necessary precautions against the introduction of cholera from Spain

Exhibition Grounds.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I see by a report of the Town Council that that body has granted the sum of $300 to assist the West Riding Agricultural Society to hold their fall exhibition on their new grounds. This is as it should be, if the Council thinks it is going to be a paying affair. It may be to a few ratepayers, but not to the majority of those that pledged their dollar last January. I hope, however, they will be able to bear it; it is the first dollar some of them ever paid for such a purpose and likely to be the last. Of course the president and some of the directors will make an effort to carry it through, if they lose heavily by it, and that is not the business of those who do not wish to take stock in it. The Review goes on to say that the Reeves who did not vote in favor of the new grounds at the south end of the town, would not be able to face the music next January and that all of them but two would be defeated. I beg leave to differ from the Review. If they had voted away the money of seven-eighths of the people they might then be afraid to meet the electors, which I am confident they would have done if they had given money to pay $500 for that out-of-the-way place, and, according to Mr. Bell's statement before them, there is no liklihood of its being paid for unless they would give a donation to it year after year.

In my opinion Mr. Bell's scheme was a far better one, for several reasons. In the first place the half of the purchase money was promised, with Mr. Cox's promise to help the society to build when called on, or he would leave it ready for their use at very low interest, which he gave proof of when he offerred the land at $100 per acre—less than he would sell it for to individuals for building purposes. These grounds could not only have been bought but practically paid for by this time. One half of the purchase money was pledged. A large portion could have been secured from the purchase of stock by outsiders, and the county could have been depended on for the balance.

I think the buildings and fencing could have been done much cheaper on the upper grounds. As Mr. Kelly furnished the lumber, he could have delivered it there at $1 per thousand less. Mr. Cox had 700 fence posts delivered on the Parnell farm at 6 cents per post. I understand they cost about three times as much at the lower grounds.

Aside from all this the upper grounds would be a great deal more central, as respects the town, as it is extending in that direction, and can not go much south for the river. And, again, the south end has the Driving Park, the middle the Horticultural Grounds and the Central Park, and, and, I think, as a ratepayer, the north of the town (which we expect to be a city soon) and Smithtown Hill, one of its best sites should have the agricultural grounds. Mr. Cox is making it so easy of access in that part, and the Junction and Lakefield cars both stop within fifteen chains of the upper grounds. In face of all these reasons the County Council was right, I think, in witholding its support, and while there are Agricultural Grounds at Norwood we need expect no support from the East Riding. Let the West Riding do its own business and do it safely. I am aware that parties in town have said that they could carry on an agricultural society if there was not a farmer in it. All right, then. Let them have it on the Driving Park and employ hacks to convey visitors to it, but let them rest assured that three quarters of the old subscribers, whose vote should have been taken instead on a new site or the disposal of an old one—and these three quarters will not join in an illegal transaction.

Yours truly,
FARMER.

The Artist's Secret.

The artist's work was done, the sweet, proud face,
The queenly head, the form of lissome grace—
The tender eyes seemed almost life-like, while
The lips were curved, as if about to smile.
He laid his brushes and his palette by.
"'Tis perfect now," he said, "I will not try
To alter o'er a shadow or color there,
'Tis Lady Una's own sweet self, divinely fair.

"She will come here for the last time to-day,
To view the finished work, perhaps will pay
A tribute to my skill, and then will go
With careless farewell word away and never know
That I have dared to love her, though as far
Beneath her as the moth beneath the star.
But I will hide my secret, no sign shall tell
The agony it costs my heart to say farewell."

A soft sigh told him he was not alone,
A warm, white hand was laid upon his own.
Turning he found Lady Una at his side:
She had learned the secret he had sworn to hide.
Close to his face she bent her queenly head.
Like stars her dark eyes glistened as she said:
"Say not farewell, for that would break my heart;

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

"Why, you miserable young beggar!" roared old Branthwaite, "do you think I mean to throw away my daughter on a fellow who couldn't make enough in a year to keep her in shoes? My daughter! who has a hundred thousand stitched to her skirt! Love her! Who would not, with fifty thousand in the bank, and three hundred acres of such land as that? Guess you ain't the first one that has found out that you could keep warm at my fireside; so you needn't take such airs over the discovery!"

Paul, who had never looked into Judith's blue eyes from this point of view, took his hat, bowed, and walked away in silence.

The old elms sighed, because they had heard and seen whisperings and glances on the old piazza of which Jacob Branthwaite had never dreamed, and Judith, who had heard every word through a half-open door, dropped three stitches to every two she knit that evening, and had to pull it all out the next morning.

There came early the next day—the elms only knew how—a note from Paul, burning, feverish, passionate.

Judith read it with an instant's flush, then hesitated, and sent an icy line back.

She could never marry against her father's will.

That night the Strathmore's had a merry-making. Both went—Paul, angry and reckless; Judith, under her assumed coldness, with throbbing and expectant heart.

Already she had half repented of her rigid answer. She might have softened the manner, if not the matter, of it. She was sick with impatience to speak with him.

She declined all invitations to dance, and waited eagerly till the merry music should ring out for the opportunity.

She knew that he was sullen, for he had not even spoken to her; but he had some cause, and it was not bold in her to seek him out, since she promised one day to marry him—aye, and would; and her heart beat high and fast.

As she thought, the cornet sounded the call to the floor.

Paul rose quickly and led out Bessie Strathmore.

Judith drew her breath hard for an instant, and then turned, with a gay laugh, to one of the young men near her:

"Mr. Conway, have you forgotten you were to dance with me?"

Paul heard the laugh, but not the words, and looked searchingly into her face as she came and stood opposite him.

She smiled haughtily, and when he took her hand, suffered it to lie cold and lifeless in his grasp.

Farquhar Conway was hardly the most brilliant of partners; but if he had been a block, Judith, in her present mood, would have hung out the flag of flirtation.

She blushed, she listened admiringly, she taught the clumsy lout how to hold her fan and handkerchief, all the time hating herself for her meanness, and yet exulting in the consciousness that Paul's fierce eyes were burning into her face.

To the most miserable dance succeeded a more miserable evening. Paul, raging at heart, and anxious not to be outdone in folly, drew all eyes upon himself and Bessie Strathmore. Judith was frantically gay, and stopped at nothing.

One moment in all that wretched time they were alone. Perhaps pitying angels drew them there. Judith's heart beat fast, and she trembled from head to foot. Paul's dark face softened a little, for he could not be near her without something of the old tenderness.

"Have you been kind to-night?" he asked under his breath.

"Have you? I half believe my father was right, after all," returned she, with true girlish inconsistency, anxious to hide the joy she felt even to be reproached.

He dropped her hand as if it had been a viper.

"May I ask you what you mean, Miss Branthwaite?" His tone and action aroused Judith's pride in an instant.

"You are easily consoled, sir; that is all. After all, Bessie Strathmore has almost as many acres as I."

A dark flush leaped up in Paul's face and he staggered back as if from a sudden blow.

When he did speak it was in a voice that she had never heard before.

"Judith, this strikes at my honor. If you believe your words, we are strangers from this night."

Judith did not believe them. Nothing but Heaven's testimony could have shaken her faith in Paul's truth, but she revolted at the thought of concession.

He was wrong. It was for him to sue for forgiveness, since he had commenced this wretched misunderstanding. She felt that he was seriously, terribly in earnest: that, perhaps, her next words would shape and color both his destiny and hers: and, in the very face of conviction, answered, with a flippant falsehood:

"I never say what I don't think, sir."

A spasm contracted Paul's face for an instant; but he answered only by a low bow and left her.

The next morning, as she sat under the elms, wondering how soon he would come, and what he would say, someone passing told her they had just seen Paul taking the train for the city.

An hour after came a package for her—a book he had promised, on the fly-leaf of which was written:

"An eternal farewell!"

* * * * * *

Time passed on, and old Branthwaite died. Then Judith began to look and wait for something. It could not have been Paul; for, though she heard of him often, prospering more and more, in the great city, she had never seen him or received any token that he remembered her existence.

Still she waited. There never came a knock or a quick step up the walk, but it brought a flush to her cheek. She never peered in the little post-office without an unacknowledged hope warm at heart.

She was fond of meeting Farquhar Conway; and all the village thought that the clumsy, well-meaning fellow was to be the lucky winner of the girl's heart and fortune.

But it was only because he now and then got a letter from Paul, and, finding that it pleased her, brought them to her to read.

Strange Things in America.

Even in American storms, or at least in American reports of them, there appears to be a touch of American humor. Not long ago we heard of the gigantic meteorite which fell, like the image of the great goddess Diana, down from heaven, and buried a house in Texas. Who has forgotten the Brazilian monster, which was many fathoms long, and lived beneath the upper crust of the earth? Even the progeny of this animal when they walked about created earthquakes which Byron would have called "young." The cyclones which have raged lately in Alabama, Ohio, and Indiana recall these prodigies of nature, the great earth-shaking beast, and the gigantic meteoric stone. What a terrible scene must nature have presented when whole forests were uprooted, literally "at one blow," of the wild west wind. In Tennessee a train was blown clean off the line into a ditch, while high in the air, soaring over astonished Alabama, a baby flew for several miles, "but escaped unhurt." This baby, which at a tender age, realized the wildest dreams of the Aeronautic society, must be meant for remarkable destinies. It is pleasant to think of the emotions of the parents, who saw, perhaps, their first disappear on the wings of the whirlwind; to picture the astonishment of the strangers among whom the babe alighted; to reflect on the advertisements in the agony columns of the Alabama papers, and to brood on the joy of the bereaved when the adventurous infant returned, in no way damaged, by parcels post. Such things only happen in favored Alabama.—London Daily News.

A Statesman of the Old School.

General James Findlay, who had served creditably in the war of 1812, was a Jackson democratic representative in the days of the contest between "Old Hickory," and "Biddle's bank." He was a type of a gentleman of the old school, and the descriptions of him recall Washington Irving's picture of the master of Bracebridge hall. The bluff and hearty manner, the corpulent person, and the open countenance of the general, his dress of the aristocratic blue and buff, and his gold-headed cane, all tallied with my conception of the English country gentleman of the olden time and the better type, and his sometimes tender walk and gouty toe gave evidence that, although he possessed most of their excellences, he also partook somewhat of their weaknesses. He was greatly beloved in Ohio, and several anecdotes are told of his kindness in enforcing the claims of the United States when he was receiver of the District land office, for lands sold on credit, as was the custom in those days. Upon one occasion there had been a general tightness in money matters, and many farms in the region northeast of Cincinnati but partly paid for were forfeited to the Government. In the discharge of his official duty General Findlay attended at the place of sale. He learned soon after his arrival there that many speculators were present prepared to purchase these lands. Mounting a stump, he opened the sale. He designated the lands aforesaid, and said that he was there to offer them to the highest bidder. He said that the original purchasers were honest men, but that in consequence of the hard times, they had failed to meet their engagements. But if they had more time the Government would lose nothing. It was hard thus to be forced from their homes, already partly paid for. But the law was imperative, and the lands must be offered. "And now," continued he, "I trust that there is no gentleman—no, I will not say that—I hope there is no d—d rascal here so mean as to buy his neighbor's home over his head. Gentleman, I offer this lot for sale. Who bids?" There was no forfeited land sold that day. Circumstances of this kind were some of the causes of General Findlay's popularity throughout his district; and consequently, it was folly, in the days of his vigor, to attempt his defeat for congress. When he ran for governor of Ohio, however, in 1834, he was defeated by Robert Lucas.—Ben: Perley Poore, in Boston Budget.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We learn from a resident of Montreal that the feeling in that city, and in Quebec generally, runs very high on the subject of Riel's death sentence. Sir John has always given in to Quebec's demands, and there is little ground to hope that he will resist the pressure that will be brought by that Province to secure not only a pardon of the criminal, but some form of monetary compensation. Riel has been the cause of the spending of seven or eight millions to suppress a rebellion, which he, assisted by the Dominion Government's tyranny and indifference, fomented, and Sir John will evidently reason that the gift of a few thousands more to Riel, to conciliate his Quebec supporters, will be a very small matter in comparison.

Sir John has chosen Mr. Thos. White as the representative of Ontario in the Dominion Cabinet. The selection seems to have been made on the lucus a non lucendo principle. Mr. White is everything he should not be as Ontario's representative. All his interest and sympathies, personal as well as political, are with Quebec. His hostility to this Province is not, however, solely of this negative character. He has been actively inimical to Ontario's interests throughout his political career. With a minister in the Cabinet unfriendly to Ontario, and with the Conservative members ever ready to sacrifice her interests to the political demands of the party, Ontario will have to continue to be the milch cow of the Dominion, and be bled at every taxable pore, until the people shall rise in their might and declare that the time to resist such continual sacrifices of her interests has come.

Harvey.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The Harvey council met at the clerk's office, August 10th, members all present.

After routine a by-law was passed levying the rates and taxes on the township of Harvey for the year 1885—amount for county purposes, $623.49; township purposes, $1,042; school section No. 1, $250; S. S. No. 2, $295; S. S. No. 3, $300.61; S. S. No. 4, $228.70; S. S. No. 5, $200; S. S. No. 6, $140; S. S. No. 7, $250; S. S. NO. 8, $289.

On motion, the sum of twenty-five dollars was granted towards building the Agricultural Hall in Bobcaygeon.

The clerk was instructed to notify Quinton Moore, Noxon Harris, Mrs. Dempsey, Seth Ward, George Quible, and Thomas Cheetham, to remove their fences encroaching on the highway on the road leading from Nogies' Creek to Bobcaygeon.

A by-law was passed re-appointing William Irwin as collector of rates and taxes for 1885.

On motion, the council adjourned, to meet at the Town Hall on Monday the 5th day of October next.

Comparative Crop Reports.

The following table gives the statistics of the following crops for the years 1885 and 1884, according to the returns made to the Bureau of Industries:—

		Acres.	Bushels.	Bush. per acre.
Fall Wheat	1885	877,745	20,433,758	23.3
	1884	884,740	20,717,681	24.0
Spring Wheat	1885	799,299	14,372,719	18.0
	1884	731,647	14,668,681	20.2
Barley	1885	598,318	17,047,539	28.5
	1884	700,472	19,119,041	27.3
Oats	1885	1,547,799	59,335,340	38.3
	1884	1,481,828	57,696,384	38.9

It should be borne in mind that the figures of the yield of crops for 1884 are the final results, while those for 1885 are estimates based on the present promise.

Annual Sermon.

To the Loyal Orange Brotherhood of Lakefield.

The following sermon was preached in the P. C. A. Hall, Lakefield, on July 12th, by Rev. A. E. De St. Dalmas, pastor of the Baptist Church; and is published by special request of the Brotherhood. The pressure of other matter has prevented its earlier insertion in our columns:—

Text.—James 1. 27:—"Pure religion."

After consenting to preach the annual sermon for the "Loyal Orange Association" of Lakefield, I carefully read its "constitution and laws," and was most impressed by what I considered to be the real object of the existence of the Association, which, as stated upon the first page in two fold, viz.—(1) "The overthrow of the most oppressive bigotry"; (2) "The restoration of pure religion and liberty." This afternoon I ask your prayerful attention to an examination of these two points.

First.—The overthrow of the most oppressive bigotry.—What! attempt to overthrow a religious system? And a number of timid back-boneless people hold up their hands in holy horror at the idea of disturbing the faith of any. Again, others do not believe in turn-coats, as if it were better, being in error to stick to it than being in the wrong. Like a man turn to the right. In order to arrive at impartial conclusions we will ask, and attempt to answer, the three following questions: (a) Is the overthrow of any system a praiseworthy object? (b) Is it true that the Roman Catholic religion is a system of the most oppressive bigotry? (c) How should Protestants seek to overthrow Romanism?

(a) Is the overthrow of any religious system a praiseworthy object? If not, how about our Missionary Societies? We do not question that they do good, and that their work is legitimate; farther, we contribute to their funds and rejoice in their success. But what does the triumph of the Gospel in heathen lands mean? Is it not the overthrow of other religious systems? Was it not the intention of our Lord that Christianity should supplant, or might we not say

OVERTHROW JUDAISM?

Again did not the establishment of Judaism mean the overthrow of other forms and systems of religion? But enough; when our Saviour said to His disciples "all power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth, go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations." He meant that every other religion was to give place to His, or in other words, that His system was to overthrow every other. There is certainly no room for a difference of opinion; all must be agreed that error must give way to truth, that the right should overthrow the wrong.

Is it true that the Roman Catholic religion is a system of the most oppressive bigotry? As the greatest untruth can be printed as well as spoken, we must be sure and have sufficient proof for all we believe; moreover, we should be careful not to allow prejudice or early training so to influence our minds that we cannot weigh or examine the views we receive and hold. If there are any Roman Catholics here this afternoon, I would like to assure them that I do not wish to say one uncharitable word in reference to their church or religion, I

ONLY DESIRE TO DO THEM GOOD, and every true Protestant desires to do good to Catholics. We will, then, give four reasons why Protestants believe that Roman Catholicism is a "system of the most oppressive bigotry." (1) Rome witholds the Bible from her people. (2) She rules the consciences of her members. (3) She enslaves her followers. (4) She seeks to annihilate Protestants and Protestantism. (1) Rome witholds the Bible from her people. I am perfectly aware that some Roman Catholics do read the Holy Bible, but in so doing they are not Roman Catholics. The priests and bishops do not encourage their flocks to read the Bible, but the very opposite; and tell the people that they cannot understand it, and it is not for them, but that they (the priests) will explain to them all that is necessary for them to know. Do any question that the Word of God is a forbidden book to the Catholics? Listen to the Rev. Newman Hall's experience in Italy:—"I had often been told by Roman Catholics in England that to say "the Bible was a forbidden book in Italy, and could not be purchased at the bookstores," was a slander. I resolved to test the question for myself, but the invariable reply to every application was as I expected—prohibited!" Let me add one incident from my own experience. About nine years ago, in the city of Ottawa, I became very intimate with a young Frenchman from Montreal, who renounced Romanism, and was converted to Christ; after a while he returned to Montreal, but his old home was closed against him, and his brothers, sisters, and even his own mother would not speak to him, except to plead with him to recant. His mother paid to have prayers offered for him in the church, and he was visited by the priest, who failing to turn him by reasoning with him, threatened him with all the curses of the Church. His mother called at his boarding-house one day when he was out, and going to his trunk found a French Bible which I had given him, and burnt it. In perfect agreement with the statement that Rome withholds the Bible from her people, and in addition to the proof given, which might be multiplied a hundredfold, is the declaration of Pope Pius IV:—"The Bible is not for the people, * * * whosoever will be saved must renounce it, * * * Bible Societies are Satanic contrivances." If any can still question the opposition of Rome to the Bible being in the hands of the people, I would like them to answer the following questions: Why is it that the Bible cannot be purchased in the book stores, and the people are forbidden to have and read the sacred volume in their own homes in those countries where Rome has the power to prevent it? Again, what Pope or Council denounced the action of those who forbade the Bible to be sold to, or read by the people? Or if it is too much to ask that the only church claiming infallibility should acknowledge its error, and denounce its own action, and ask for the decree of the Pope, or of the Council, that now permits or recommends the word of God to be read by all Roman Catholics? But after all, may not the Church of Rome be right in

WITHOLDING THE BIBLE FROM THE LAITY?

What did Christ teach upon this point? His command to all those who would know the way of salvation is to "Search the Scriptures."—John v., 39. Again, what was the practice in the Apostolic church, and did the Apostles favor the idea of the people studying the scriptures for themselves? We have a satisfactory answer to our question in Acts. xvii., 11, when we are told that the Christians of Berea were "more noble than those of Thessalonica in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily." Moreover the Apostle Paul's reminding Timothy that "from a child he had known the scriptures," shows us that it is right that even children should study the "Word of God."

(2) She rules the consciences of her members. What is the use of God giving to each man a conscience, if priest or Pope is to be the custodian of that conscience. A great deal might be said, and an abundance of proof given to establish this point, but more as needed, as all is conceded in the following claim of the Pope:—"You tell me I ought to submit to the civil power, that I am subject to the laws of kings, I say, I am liberated from all civil subjection, that my Lord made me the subject of no one on earth, King or otherwise, that in his right, I am sovereign, I acknowledge no civil superior. "I claim to be the supreme judge and director of the consciences of men; of the peasant that tills the field and the prince that sits on the throne; of the household that lives in the shade of privacy and the legislature that makes laws for kingdoms—I am the sole, last supreme judge of what is right and wrong."

(3) Further, she enslaves her followers. Does she not teach that there is no salvation out of the church? Does she not fill the minds of her people with the fear of excommunication here, and purgatory hereafter? Are not her people taxed, and many of them kept poor, to keep up the priests, bishops, and all the establishments in connection with the church? Does she not impose a heavy tax upon many of her people for the support of Separate Schools, and has not the Government been weak and foolish enough to permit it? I suppose we have all seen, in some way or other, the overbearing spirit of Rome. When in Ottawa I often heard persons say that during important debates Roman Catholic priests would be sitting in the visitors' gallery, closely following the business of the House (not that they had not a right to be there, as citizens of a free country), and when occasion called for it, would leave the gallery, descend to the lobby, send a messenger in for a Roman Catholic member to come out and give him instructions, and then he (the member) would return, and upon the first opportunity speak as he was believed to have been influenced by the priest. I have witnessed the very same myself, and not only is the Romish influence exerted in the Dominion Parliament, but in our own local house in Toronto, and nearly all our municipal and local matters. Are these extreme cases? Far from it. Listen to what the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone says: "It was extensively believed that Pope of Rome had been, and was a trespasser upon the ground which belonged to the civil authority. * * * all other Christian bodies are content with freedom in their own religious domain, * * * the Rome of the middle ages claimed universal monarchy. The modern Church of retracted nothing. * * * No one can now become her convert without renouncing his moral and mental freedom, and placing his civil loyalty and duty at the mercy of another."

ROME HAS ABANDONED NOTHING,

(4). She seeks to annihilate Protestants and Protestantism. The horrors of the rack and the stake are too well known as historical facts, to be enlarged upon at this time. Millions of those whom she designates "heretics" has she put to death. Seventy thousand (70,000) perished at her hand in one night in France. O! says some one, "you ought to know that that was Rome of ages ago." Yes! I know that, but Rome to-day is what she was then, and it is true as Mr. Gladstone says—"The modern church of Rome has abandoned nothing—retracted nothing." The church of Rome would repeat to-day all the persecution of the ages past if she only had the power, and in proof of this the only last winter, should be sufficient to convince one and all, if any deny the persecutions by the Roman Catholics and ask why, when my great grandfather (who was a canon of the R. C. Church in Italy) renounced Romanism, did they try to sieze and kill him? Admitting that that was one hundred years ago, does not change the fact, for Rome has not changed in principle.

EXPERIENCE OF FATHER CHINIQUY IN MONTREAL,

(c) How should Protestants seek to overthrow Romanism! The very best answer that can be given to the question is, to my mind, the realization of the second position indicated at the commencement, and which we will now briefly consider.

Secondly.—The restoration of pure religion and liberty.

But, what is meant by pure religion?

What is true liberty?

What is meant by pure religion? It involves two factors, viz: faith and practice, or life. Pure faith is a faith that is in harmony with God's word, for it is pure (Ps. 119, 140) and must ever be the standard of purity. "To the law and to the testimony" (Isaiah viii., 20). That is, we must square our belief, our doctrines, all according to God's word, and not attempt to make His word agree with our own ideas. What we want is "the Bible, the whole Bible, and the Bible only." In James iii., 17, we read, "the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable." All Christians should love peace dearly, but that peace which is purchased at the expense of purity is too dear for any to accept to whom Christ is dearer than all besides. At any cost, we must have purity, and when we have it, peace will not be far off. A pure life. A pure faith without a pure life is of very little account, even as the inspired James says: "Faith without works is dead, being alone." A man may contend with all earnestness for a pure faith, but if his life is impure, his influence will not only be destroyed, but he will bring shame and reproach upon his faith. Many people never tire of arguing for their faith, but unfortunately, they are not all as willing to live it. (2) What is liberty? The only true liberty is that which the children of God enjoy. It is not gained by the sword, but as Christ says: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." And again, "if the Son shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." One of earth's greatest blessings, and one beyond all praise, is liberty. New York's monster statue, "Liberty Enlightening the World," cannot give her citizens liberty; it is only the Word of God, accompanied by the Spirit's power, that is able to accomplish that. May God hasten the time when Roman Catholics shall come to the truth, when all shall enjoy the liberty of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and when it may be said of all Christians, "Behold, how these brethren love one another!"

Church Going.

According to information given to the Christian Union by a large number of clergymen, not more than five per cent. of American artizans in cities habitually attend religious services of any kind. All but two of the letters say that the attendance is diminishing, and all but one that the neglect is not from unbelief in Christianity. The cause of non church attendance, as given by these experts, may be summed as follows: The men have to work all the week and they recreate on Sunday. They cannot dress as well as those with whom they must associate and therefore stay away. They think secret societies are as good as the church. They are unable to pay for the privileges because of the high prices of things they must have. Some employers of labor are so bad in their treatment of their employees that the men do not want to go where they shall meet those in whose real christianity they have so little faith. All the letters indicate that especially in the large places artisans feel that they are not welcome in churches frequented by the wealthier classes.

Chapter VIII—Continued.

At the door opened, Pauline, without a word, without a gesture of surprise, without anything that showed she was more aware of my presence than before, passed me and entered first. I followed her, and, closing the door behind me, found myself in perfect darkness. I heard her light quick step in front of me; I heard her ascending the stairs; I heard a door open, and then, and only then, I summoned up presence of mind enough to force my limbs to bear me in pursuit—and my blood seemed to be iced water, my flesh was creeping, my hair was bristling up, as, still in darkness, I crossed the hall and found the staircases without difficulty.

Why should I not find it, dark, pitch-dark as it was? I knew the road to it well! Once before I had reached it in darkness, and many times besides, in dreams, had I crossed that space! Like a sudden revelation the truth came to me. It came to me as the key turned in the lock. I was in that very house into which I had strayed three years ago. I was crossing the very hall, ascending the same stairs, and should stand in the identical room which had been the scene of that terrible unexpiated crime. I should see with restored sight the spot where, blind and helpless, I had nearly fallen a victim to my rashness. But Pauline, what brought her here?

Yes, as I expected! as, in fact, I felt certain! The stairs the same and the lintel of the door in the exact place it should be. I might be reacting the events of that fearful night, complete even to the darkness. For a moment I wondered whether the last three years were not the dream; whether I was not blind now; whether there was such a being as my wife? But I threw the fancy aside.

Where was Pauline? Recalled to myself, I realized the necessity of light. Drawing my match-box from my pocket I struck a vesta, and by its light I entered the room which once before I had entered with little hope of ever leaving.

My first thought, my first glance, was for Pauline. She was there, standing erect in the apartment, with both hands pressed to her brow. The expression of her face and eyes was little changed; it was easy to see she comprehended nothing as yet. But I felt that something was struggling with her, and I dreaded the moment when it should take coherence and form. I dreaded it for her and I dreaded it for myself. What awful passages would it reveal to me!

The wax light burned down to my fingers, and I was compelled to drop it. I struck another, then looked about for some means of making the illumination sustained. To my great joy I found a half-burned candle in a candlestick on the mantelpiece. I blew the thick dust out of the cup formed by the melted wax at the bottom of the wick, and after a little spluttering and resistance, managed to induce it to remain lighted.

Pauline stood always in the same attitude, but I fancied her breath was quickening. Her fingers were playing convulsively round her temples, fidgeting and pushing her thick hair back, striving, it seemed to me, to conjure thought to return to that empty shrine. I could do nothing but wait; and whilst I waited I glanced around me.

We were in a good-sized room, substantially but not fashionably furnished; style altogether was that of an ordinary lodging-house. It was clear it had not been occupied for some time, as dust lay thick on every article. I could throw my mind back and recall the very corner of the room in which I was stationed whilst the assassins were so busily engaged. I could mark the spot where I fell upon the yet quivering body, and I shuddered as I could not resist peering on the floor for traces of the crime. But if the carpet was the same one, it was of a dark red hue and kept its secret well. At one end of the room were folding-doors—it must have been from behind these I heard those haunting sounds of distress. I threw them open, and, holding my candle on high, looked in. The room was of much the same kind as the other one, but, as I fully expected, it contained a piano—the very piano, perhaps, whose notes had merged into that cry of horror.

What possessed me! What impulse urged me! I shall never know. I laid down the candle; I entered the back room; I lifted the dust-covered lid of the piano and I struck a few notes. Doubtless it was the tragical associations of the scene which made me, without thinking why or wherefore, blend together the notes which commenced that great song which I had heard as I lingered outside the door, listening to the sweet voice singing, and wondering whose voice it was. As I struck those notes I looked through the folding-door and at the motionless statue-like figure of Pauline.

A nervous trembling seemed to pass over her frame. She turned and came toward me, and there was a look in her face which made me move aside from the piano, and wonder and fear what was to take place.

The cloak I had thrown around her had fallen from her shoulders. She seated herself on the music bench, and striking the keys with a master hand played brilliantly and faultlessly the prelude to the song of which I had struck a few vagrant notes.

I was thunderstruck. Never till now had she shown the slightest taste for music—as I have said, it appeared rather to annoy and irritate her. Now she was bringing out sounds which it seemed absurd to expect from that neglected and untaught pupil.

But after the first few bars my astonishment ceased. As well as if I had been told, I knew what would happen—or part of it. I was even prepared, when the moment came for the voice to join the music, to hear Pauline sing as faultlessly as she was playing, yet to sing in the same subdued manner as on that fatal night. So fully prepared I was that with breathless emotion I waited until the song came to the very note at which it finished when once before I listened to it. So fully prepared, that when she started wildly to her feet and uttered once more that cry of horror, my arms were round her in a moment, and I bore her to a sofa close by.

To her, as well as to me, all the occurrences of that dreadful night were being reproduced. The past had come back to Pauline—come back at the moment it left her.

What the reflux might do eventually—whether it would be a blessing or a curse—I had no time to consider. All my cares were needed by Pauline. My task was terrible! I had to hold her down by main force, to endeavor in every possible way to soothe her and prevent her cries, which rang so loudly that I feared the neighbors would be alarmed. And all the while she struggled with me, strove to repulse me and regain her feet, as certainly as if I could read her thoughts I knew that whatever had happened formerly was once more before my eyes. Once more she was being held down by a strong hand, most likely on the same couch, and once more her struggles were gradually becoming feebler and her cries growing fainter. It needed only for the latter to sink at last into a repetition of that dismal moan to make the picture, so far as she was concerned, complete. The only difference was that the hands now laid upon her were loving ones.

All things up to the present situation, and all that I narrate after the termination of this chapter, I expect to be believed. I do not say that such events and coincidences are of every day occurrence. Had they been so, I should have no object in writing this tale. But I do say this, all else save this one thing I could prove to be true, if not by direct, by circumstantial evidence; all else can be explained either simply or scientifically; but what follows I can only give my own word for. Call it what you like, dream, hallucination, overheated imagination—call it anything save invention—I shall not be annoyed. This is what happened.

Pauline at last lay still. Her moan had sunk into silence. She seemed once more to have lost all consciousness. My one idea now was to remove her as speedily as possible from this fatal place. All sorts of strange thoughts and speculations were thronging my brain. All sorts of hopes and fears were shaking me. What would the explanation be, if ever I could get it?

My poor darling lay still and peaceful. I thought I would let her rest so for a few moments before I carried her out. I dreaded what waking her might mean. So I took her hand and held it close in mine.

The candle was on the mantelpiece behind me. It threw little or no light into the front room, the folding-doors of which were only partially open—the half behind the couch on which Pauline lay being closed. It was, therefore, impossible for me from my seat beside her to look into the front room. Indeed, as I sat there my face was turned from it.

I held my wife's hand for a few seconds, and then a strange undefinable feeling crept over me—the kind of feeling sometimes experienced in a dream in which two persons appear, and the dreamer cannot be certain with which one's thoughts and acts he identifies himself. For awhile I seemed to have a dual existence. Although perfectly aware that I still occupied the same seat, still held Pauline's hand in mine, I was also seated at the piano, and in some way gazed through the half-opened doors into the other room, and that room was full of light!

Light so brilliant that in a glance I could see everything the apartment contained. Each article of furniture, the pictures on the walls, the dark curtains drawn over the window at the end, the mirror over the fireplace, the table in the center, on which a large lamp was burning. I could see all this, and more! For round the table were grouped four men, and the faces of two of the party were well known to me!

That man who was facing me—leaning across the table on which his hands rested, whose features seemed full of alarmed surprise, whose eyes were fixed on one object a few feet away from him—that man was Ceneri, the Italian doctor, Pauline's uncle and guardian.

That man who was near the table on Ceneri's right hand—who stood in the attitude of one ready to repel a possible attack, whose face was fierce and full of passion, whose dark eyes were blazing—that man was the English-speaking Italian, Macari, or, as he now styled himself, Anthony March, Pauline's brother. He also was looking at the same object as Ceneri.

The man in the background—a short, thick-set man, with a scar on his cheek—was a stranger to me. He was looking over Ceneri's shoulder in the same direction.

And the object they all looked at was a young man, who appeared to be falling out of his chair, and whose hand grasped convulsively the hilt of a dagger, the blade of which was buried in his heart, buried I knew by a blow which had been struck downward by one standing over him.

All this I saw and realized in a second. The attitude of each actor, the whole scene surrounding was taken in by me as one takes in with a single glance the purport and meaning of a picture. Then I dropped Pauline's hand and sprang to my feet.

Where was the lighted room? Where were the figures I had seen? Where was that tragic scene which was taking place before my eyes? Vanished into thin air! The candle was burning dimly behind me, the front room was in dusk. Pauline and I were the only living creatures in the place!

It was a dream, of course. Perhaps, under the circumstances, not an unnatural one. Knowing what I knew already of the crime which had taken place here; feeling sure that in some way Pauline had been present when it was committed; excited by what had occurred to-night—Pauline's strange walk, her sudden bursting into song, the very song I had before heard, that song with the dreadful ending—it is no wonder that I imagined a scene like this, and taking the only persons I knew who were in any way connected with my poor wife, brought them into the life-like vision.

The Daily Examiner.

MONDAY, AUGUST 17, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Me for Stoney Lake.

Remember the True Blue's excursion to Stony Lake on Wednesday next, 19th of August. See posters for particulars.

Prob'e Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Moderate east and south winds ; fine warm weather.

Riverside Park.

A grand base ball match will be played on August 19th, between the Clippers, of Hamilton, champions of the Dominion of Canada, and the Peterborough Club. Game to commence at 2.30 p.m. All admirers of base ball should attend, as this will be one of the best games ever played in Peterborough. Tickets, gentlemen, 25c.; ladies, 10c.

Sepulchral Souvenirs.

Mr. —— Root of Rochester, is visiting in town with his brother-in-law, Mr. Charles Huffman. He has presented the latter with fragments of the wood, velvet and trimmings of General Grant's coffin, secured through the friendly offices of a friend who worked on the construction of the narrow house of the great American General.

The Crops.

Reports of the state of the crops from many sources are somewhat discouraging. Late spring wheat is said to have suffered badly from rust, and weevil are playing havoc with white Russian. Barley has been a good deal stained and will be rather light in the berry this year. Wheat is not expected to average more than from 8 to 10 bushels per acre.

Justice's Justice.

The attendance of unwashed at the session of the Police Court this morning was unusually large, the case against Ritchie, the young man arrested on Saturday evening, seeming to be the attraction. Mr. James Stevenson occupied the Bench. Ritchie entered a plea of guilty to P. C. McGinty's charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, and was fined $2 and costs or 20 days. Asa B. Downer was arraigned on two charges, abusive language to his brother, and an assault committed on his wife. He admitted both. In the first case he was bound to the peace, and judgment was reserved in the second. The case of non-payment of wages brought by N. Doumans against Faucher was adjourned for a day.

Tackled a Tartar.

Two roughs, supposed to be the residuum of the Doria show, made an attack at a late hour on Friday night on Mr. Thomas Hewson as he was going home on Hunter street. Mr. Hewson happened to carry with him a stout blackthorn stick, which proved an important factor in the interchange of courtesies that ensued. A smart blow across the face with the stick followed by a right hander from the shoulder convinced the assailants that they had "woke the wrong man," and not waiting for any other developments they precipitately turned tail and ran. On getting home Mr. Hewson found that, in the melee, he had lost a valuable stone from a ring he were at the time, and did not expect ever to find it. In the morning, however, a friend of his was successful in finding it on the scene of the row.

Telephone Extension.

The Bell Telephone Company is flourishing in Peterborough. The company has already in town 92 subscribers, and wires are being erected to provide for eight additional. This will make the number of subscribers an even hundred, the largest by far of any town in Canada. This afternoon a gang of men went to work upon the extension of the line to Lakefield, and it is certain that within ten days or a fortnight we shall be telephonically tied to our enterprising village neighbors. The success of the company here is largely due to its success in securing live representatives. Mr. Edwards, who established the business here, and his successor, Mr. Smith, did excellent service for the company, and Mr. H. W. Kent, the present representative, is just the man for the position—energetic, affable, obliging and alive to his work.

ATHLETICS.

Words to the Wise.

Cricket.

There was an unusually large turn out of members to practice on Saturday afternoon, two teams, each fifteen strong, being opposed to each other on the field.

We are pleased to learn that our suggestions in regard to the Peterborough Lacrosse Club are to some extent being adopted, and that the club will undergo some reorganizing, and that an effort is being made to secure a practice ground more convenient to the town. Nowhere in Canada does better material for a junior twelve exist, and we hope and believe that before the close of the present season the club will attain the high position from which even its most ardent admirers must admit it has fallen.

Lacrosse.

RICHMOND HILL'S BEAT THE TORONTOS.

The Richmond Hill lacrosse club, northern champions, played the first twelve of the Torontos a game on Saturday, on the Rosedale grounds, winning the first and third games in ten minutes and one hour respectively. The Torontos won the second game in ten minutes, and at six o'clock, the time agreed upon to cease playing, no other game had been won and the Richmond Hill men were declared the winners. Now Peterboroughs, go and do likewise !

We are getting somewhat weary of the incessant interchange of charges of cowardice and ungentlemanly conduct that for some time past have been bandied back and forth between the baseball clubs of this town and Peterborough. The gentlemen in whose hands the management of those clubs rests should remember that every charge of unsportsmanlike conduct publicly made by them against another club is an indirect attack upon the interests of the game they both profess to have so much at heart. Any differences that may exist between the two teams should be at once privately and amicably settled. We do not believe that either side are so bad as in the heat of controversy their opponents have tried to paint them, and hope ere long to have the pleasure of reporting a fair, manly, amicably contested game between them.

The Diamond.

The Contest Between Lawyers and Merchants.

To-morrow the limbs of the law meet the mercantile men in a friendly game of base ball on Riverside Park. The lawyers seem to be the favorites among the knowing ones, and all sorts of small bets are being made as to the probable scores that will be run up. T. O'Neil and P. Sullivan will officiate behind the bat. The following gentlemen are expected to play :

LAWYERS.	MERCHANTS.
J. Hetty	W. J. Green
W. H. Moore	R. W. Muncaster
R. E. Wood	R. Salisbury
J. O'Meara	R. B. McKee
W. A. Stratton	M. Giroux
E. A. Peck	E. J. Hartley
John Green	E. B. Sawyer
Long	J. Carton
T. O'Neil, catcher	P. Sullivan

In the Amateur Athletic Association, Peterborough has an institution in which a far more pretentious town might justly take pride. Not even in Toronto, that we are aware of, does there exist an association covering so wide a range of athletic pursuits or offering so many facilities and inducements to the amateur athlete. The great value of athletic exercise has long been established, and it is safe to say that a young man with athletic tendencies is a better man, morally, as well as physically, than he who spends his spare hours around the billiard or pool table, or in reading what is generally known as light literature. There is one danger, perhaps, in athletic pursuits, the tendency to professionalism, which, in these days, has a demoralizing influence. This evil is guarded against in an association like that of Peterborough, where the management is in the hands of gentleman by whom everything approaching professionalism is frowned down, and the spirit of open, honorable, pure amateurism inculcated. We therefore think it the duty of every lover of manly sport, of parents who desire to see their sons grow up courageous and manly men, and of employers who place its true value on their employees taking recreation in a proper manner, to encourage this institution. There are two ways in which this may be done. The first by becoming members and the second by evincing an interest in the various games indulged in by the members, and attending their races and matches. The Association, in establishing a fortnightly series of contests which are alike beneficial to participants and interesting to spectators, has done something never before attempted in Canada, a large turn out of friends of amateur sport to witness these would be extremely helpful to the Association, stimulating the competitors to greater exertions and increasing the number of entries. We hope at the next meeting to see a large number of spectators, and would especially invoke the attendance of the fair sex, for brave men ever struggle more keenly for the laurel of victory when conscious of being watched by woman's eye. And we also hope that parents and employees, themselves perhaps beyond the age at which active exercise is needed, will strengthen the institution by becoming members, remembering that the training up in our midst of a race of honorable, manly, athletic boys cannot fail to bring credit, not only to Lindsay, but the Dominion at large.

$10.00 Reward.

Will be paid for the conviction of the person or persons who have torn and mutilated the posters of the True Blue's excursion and picnic on Wednesday next, 19th August, to Stony Lake. Fred W. Wier, chairman of Committee.

What We may Expect.

Wedlock, who shot Odette, to clear out.

A dull week.

Some pointers from the Hamilton Clippers.

An amusing game between the lawyers and merchants.

And the doctors to have an innings after they get through.

The Ottawa base-ballers to feel sat on.

And to make all kinds of excuses for their defeat at Toronto.

What We Would Like to See.

Policemen get a chance to do their duty.

And the roughs who obstruct them arrested.

The medical health officer risk his life by exploring some of Peterborough's back lanes.

A new bridge at Smith street.

And Douro farmers hauling wheat over it.

At $1.50 a bushel

That baseball match between Peterborough and Lindsay arranged for.

The man who struck Tom Hewson.

The new iron bridge at Lakefield repainted.

What they are Saying.

We beat the Torontos' first twelve.—The Richmond Hills.

But our first twelve wasn't on.—The Torontos.

Why can't we do it.—The Peterboroughs.

I'm a jumper from Jumpersville.—F. T. Hunt.

Didn't I make a good job of grading Chambers street.—Street Inspector Wilson.

Only saw saw.—Ex-Inspector Johnston.

I'm the dandy copper of George Street Squad.—Charle McGinity.

But I gave you all you wanted.—Tom Ritchie.

Two dollars and costs.—James Stephenson, acting Magistrate.

Personal.

Mr. M. B. Aylesworth, architect, of Toronto, is in town on business.

Mr. Hand, editor of the Collingwood Bulletin, and at one time a teacher in the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, is in town renewing old acquaintances.

Mr. A. White, formerly Traffic Manager of the Midland at this place, is registered at the Oriental.

Mr. C. A. Lawford, teller Bank of Montreal, has gone east to enjoy a short vacation.

Mr. Parish, of C. R. Parish & Co., publishers, Toronto, is in town for a few days on a visit to friends.

Mr. W. H. Cottingham, an old resident of Peterborough, but who has been in Montreal 3 years, arrived in town on Saturday and is stopping at the Oriental.

Mr. John McKee, druggist, whose father died in April last, has received a telegram, stating that his mother is seriously ill at Teeswater. Mr. McKee leaves for that place this evening.

Caledonian Games at Montreal

A Peterborough Man to the Fore in the Long Jump.

The thirtieth annual games of the Caledonian society, which were largely attended, were held in Montreal on Saturday. The professional mile was won by John Raine, of Ottawa, in 4 min. 39 sec. J. W. Moffatt won the amateur mile in 4 min. 45 sec., and the half mile was won in 2.10 by H. J. Shaw, a member of the M. A. A. A. Archie Moffatt, a Western Ontario man, cleared 9 ft. 5 in. in the pole jump, and won all the other jumps except the long jump, which was won by a citizen of Peterborough, Mr. H. T. Hunt.

DEATHS.

FINNIE.—In Peterborough, on the 15th inst., Lucretia Law, wife of Mr. Peter Finnie, aged 43 years.

O'BRIEN.—At Ashburnham, on the 16th inst., Julia Ann, only daughter of Mr. William O'Brien, aged 20 years.

A Scene of Saturday.

Considerable excitement was caused at the corner of George and Hunter streets about 6 o'clock on Saturday evening by a struggle between P. C. McGinity and a young man named Thos. Ritchie, who was being arrested by the officer for drunk and disorderly conduct. Ritchie was very violent in resisting the officer, and threw himself down on a drain grating at the corner, to which he clung so tightly that when raised to his feet the grating came with him. A large crowd quickly surrounded the pair, many of whom evidently sympathised with the prisoner and made offensive demonstrations to the officer. With the assistance of Chief Johnston, however, the prisoner was taken to the lock up and securely lodged. At the Police Court this morning he wisely pleaded guilty and was fined two dollars and costs. It is a great pity a few of the obstructionists, who surrounded the Police on Saturday evening, could not have been arrested and, similarly fined.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short ; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO
